Now, whether or not in the area of land law and in conveyancing it is incumbent upon the courts, in some way, to try to analyse and interpret the intention of the Legislature, of course, is something that is debatable. It can be discussed among lawyers. My only reply to that, Mr. Chairman, would be that I think it is incumbent upon us to have the best possible draftsmen to draft our legislation so that there aren't the loopholes we find now existing in some of our legislation dealing with conveyancing. When someone is successful in developing some type of scheme or is able to avoid the application of legislation, it is incumbent upon us, of course, to amend that legislation immediately.

In dealing with the remarks of the—

Mr. Renwick: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, before the minister goes on, isn't there some sense of obligation on the government to validate the titles of persons who are now placed in the position where they don't know whether they have a good title or do not have a good title to land? Surely there must be something incumbent on the government to deal with that specific problem.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, when you have a situation as flagrant as exists at the present time in this whole area of checkerboarding, where there was no real legislation dealing with land separations at the municipal level and where it was incumbent upon the province to legislate in a very broad way, when many of the conveyances took place prior to that legislation and some after, and when there still were loopholes and ways to circumvent that legislation, in view of the hardships that exist as a result of that, certainly the government has to consider some type of validation legislation.

Mr. Renwick: May I just again comment to the minister? There is in the Interpretation Act of the Province of Ontario a section relating to the interpretation of the statutes of this province which is binding on the courts and which the courts didn't refer to at all in their decision. The Interpretation Act provides very clearly in section 10 that:

Every Act shall be deemed to be remedial, whether its immediate purport is to direct the doing of anything that the Legislature deems to be for the public good or to prevent or punish the doing of anything that it deems to be contrary to the public good; and shall accordingly receive such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the Act, according to its true intent, meaning and spirit.

In the face of language such as that, it seems to me that it is incumbent upon the court to give the benefit of the doubt to the intention of the Legislature when it is dealing in matters of the public good relating to the planning of land use.

In strict legal terms this is the point I am making, that that provision of the Interpretation Act is totally ignored when the court is dealing in this ancient game of the conveyancers' art. I think that that section clearly distinguishes the taxing statutes, where I think we all agree on the strict interpretation of the statute when it is extracting money from the citizen. That isn't what the Planning Act was doing.

The Planning Act was dealing with the public good in an area where it was necessary to override the private rights of property. What the courts have done, as they always do, is to fail to understand that the Legislature of this province is quite capable of passing a statute which will override the private rights of landowners in the conveyance of their property. That is what section 10 of the Interpretation Act means. Perhaps next time there is a reference to the courts, you could ask the courts to give their judicial interpretation of whether or not section 10 wasn't sufficient to form a basis upon which they could have answered question 9 clearly and affirmatively, and simply said to the Legislature and to the people of the Province of Ontario, "If you don't like what they did, kick them out at the next time around in the election, but when they have enacted statutes give them the benefit of the doubt and don't give the rights of private property paramount rights over the express intention of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario about matters affecting the public weal."

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The only thing I would like to add to that, Mr. Chairman, is, for example, when there are cases before the Supreme Court of Canada in respect to the constitution, particularly vis-à-vis federal or provincial rights or vires, the interpretation of the statute, an old statute like that, is a very basic question and a very real consideration.

In this situation, as the hon. member well knows, we have the Attorney General asking a number of hypothetical questions to the court of appeal. We have no real adversary system, no real submissions or debate and no real hearing in the normal sense. I am wondering if they really went into the interpretation or the intent of the Legislature as much as they normally would.

Mr. Renwick: They spent a good deal of the judgement dealing with the intention of the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the points raised by the hon. member for Lakeshore, we are moving toward the objectives that he suggested as far as using more coloured papers, for example; there are what you might want to call many exotic areas of research that we intend to move into in the next few months.

The hon. member mentioned the civil liberties group as one voice, and of course he mentioned the chiefs of police could be considered another voice. But I think we have to hear from all of them, whether we agree with their stances or not. Certainly the chiefs of police in this province feel, because they are very close to the scene, that they have a legitimate opinion. I think it is incumbent upon us to view all opinions and, in light of those opinions and our research and consideration, to make the right decisions.

I don't think any one group has all the good ideas or that any one group can be considered wrong or archaic in its thinking. Certainly we are using the device of green papers and different coloured papers to gather opinion without definitely committing the government and, at the same time, to get the benefit of various opinions on some very important questions.

The hon. member asked a specific question—

Mr. Lawlor: Before you come to that, may I simply say that if a junior member even of high estate in your ministry went about making public statements, you would certainly see that he was answerable to you.

The Civil Liberties Association is an autonomous, completely divorced group of citizens who have come together on their own and voluntarily; as far as I know they receive no benefits from your department or any other source. They have tried to do some kind of research work in this general area—surely their position is different from that of the chiefs of police. I don't think you have really given them very much consideration over the years as to precisely what they want. I don't wish to place a blanket around them; at the same time, I think that they have enormous responsibility in this regard as subordinate officers to the Ministry of the Solicitor General, and I just wonder if that has ever been recognized.

If an officer of a police force wanted to take exception to what the chief had to say at a Kiwanis dinner the previous night, he would very soon find himself in hot water; the chief of police vis-à-vis you is in the same position. Do you find that altogether palatable? Do you particularly welcome it when all the arguments weigh in a particular direction, a direction in which legislation hasn't proceeded for 25 years?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell).

Mr. M. B. Dymond (Ontario): Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ontario.

Mr. Dymond: I have listened to this with some interest but as a layman I must admit this is certainly beyond the comprehension of a simple country doctor. I would suggest to the Provincial Secretary for Justice that we might leave the exotic quite alone for a little while. There are some very homely, common everyday problems that need to be dealt with vigorously and effectively, as quickly as possible—problems of which he is not totally ignorant.

I have in my riding a group of people about whom I have spoken on many occasions to different ministries, and on whose behalf I have spoken; and while I haven't been as noisy as my good friend from Waterloo has been on their behalf, I have other methods of dealing with my constituency problems, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): So far your efforts haven't been very effective in helping the victims of Century City.

Mr. Dymond: They're equally effective. It isn't always the big wind or the earthquake or the fire that achieves things.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): You might have the ear of the civil service.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): It is high time we had a government debate on Century City.

Mr. Dymond: I do want to say to you, however, that if we leave out the green and blue and the black and blue paper so beautifully and aptly discussed by my colleague from Lakeshore, we don't need to use that. We can use the common ordinary white paper we use every day or, even without paper, we can deal with some of these problems.

Mr. Lawlor: I always fear the white paper.

Mr. Dymond: These people sold their land to a developer and it looked like a good deal. This happened a long time ago, in 1968, in fact, to begin with. It looked like a good deal, and it was a good deal as far as they were concerned until this government, in its wisdom, said that this project could not be allowed.

An unfortunate thing happened, however. Many of my people were left with mortgages which they found were, to all intents and purposes, worthless as far as they were concerned. For some 2½ or three years the purchaser—the developer—has not only been in default of the principle but has been in default of the interest and, indeed, also in default of the taxes, paying only enough to keep the property off the market for tax sales.

The developers, through their legal experts, tell me that it is because of an amendment which we passed to the Planning Act—an amendment, Mr. Chairman, I would draw to your attention, which was passed after these farmers sold their lands and now they can't foreclose their mortgages. They can't reclaim their lands and they're completely frustrated in all of their efforts. I urge the government, Mr. Chairman, through the Provincial Secretary for Justice—and that's a good word, justice—

Mr. Good: There has been none up to now.

Mr. Dymond:—it's a word that's very meaningful in this matter. I urge him to exercise his full sense of justice and find some way, quickly and definitely, of making it possible for these people either to be paid for the land or to reclaim it in the ordinary course as the average citizen has a right to do.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Had to speak out on that, when your usual back door method didn't work.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1101?

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, I'm certainly glad we've been able to bring the whole problem of Century City out into public debate in this Legislature. It's something that should have been done two years ago and I welcome the remarks of the member for Ontario. I hope that, on his behalf, the government will move now that the thing has been brought out into the open because the people in Century City are fed up right up to here!

They don't know where to turn. They've spoken to everyone in cabinet, their own members, the member for Ontario South (Mr. W. Newman) and, finally, I got involved in it. This is the first time, to my knowledge, there's been any public debate in this Legislature about this shameful thing which has existed for over two years. I commend the member for Ontario for bringing it out again.

Mr. Chairman: We have an amendment before us by Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, just before you get to the amendment—

Mr. Good: Let's get a response from the minister.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that as far as this whole business of checkerboarding and the circumventing of the Planning Act is concerned, this is something that is under discussion in our policy field and I'm sure that the Attorney General will tell you during his estimates that we have every intention of doing something about it. There is no sense in prolonging it. The problem won't go away. The situation, as the hon. members for Ontario and Waterloo North mentioned, will not improve until we move. We have to move and there has to be legislation here.

To the member for Lakeshore, just one trip and that's only since September.

Mr. Chairman: The member for St. George.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Chairman, I'm just a new girl here so perhaps I'm not quite acquainted with all of the matters pertaining to this ministry, as my friends and colleagues are.

I have noted recommendation 8(1) in the third COGP report and it said: "Policy ministers without operating responsibility should be appointed to devote full-time attention to (1) setting priorities . . ."

Mr. Speaker, with my simple mind, I would like to understand what the priorities are which have in fact been set by the secretary. I would like to understand what the priorities are with reference to organized crime in this province, because it was my impression that this government was brought, kicking and screaming, to the position of setting up a royal commission to investigate one aspect, basically, of this whole field.

Perhaps the secretary could answer that question—could tell us whether he approves of the type of investigation which has been going on in the sister province of Quebec, or just how he feels this matter should be handled, if in fact it is one of his priorities.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Aren't you lucky, Bob?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: You're right.

Mrs. Campbell: After receiving the information as to what the priorities are, I would like to understand what leadership has been given in policy development by this secretary. Again, Mr. Chairman, I have not seen evidence of it, but of course, as I say, I haven't been here all that long.

Thirdly, I should like to have spelled out for me just what co-ordinating has gone on among the respective policy fields in this galaxy. On top of that I would like to know how many tours this secretary has taken—the road-shows which I understand one of the secretaries has undertaken.

It is a part of the whole philosophy of this third report—and I think I'd better quote so I shan't be accused of misquoting. The report lists "the major aspects of a policy minister's role," and I'm quoting from page 16 of the interim report No. 3, dated Dec. 19, 1971: "The second major aspect of a policy minister's role affects his relationship with the general public."

It is intended, according to my reading of this report, that the secretary, having been relieved of administrative responsibilities, will be consulting with the public to advise the public of the policies of this super-ministry and perhaps of other aspects of the galaxy.

Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, I find that all of these questions relate very clearly and definitely to the matter of the estimates which I'm being asked to review. If I might have answers to those questions, Mr. Chairman, then I might be better able to come to the conclusion that, in fact, this is a functioning portion of this government which ought to be supported fully, or that it is not and that I should not then be supporting it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I'd like the answers.

Mr. W. Newman: What's the question?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It's unfortunate that the hon. member for St. George wasn't here on Friday morning.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Is that when the minister discussed organized crime which was the member's question?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, but we did discuss priorities. We did discuss some of the activities of the policy secretary field. I attempted to explain at that time just what we were doing from the point of view of a collective discussion of those areas that we feel are priority areas. At that time, as I mentioned, we were involved in such areas as uniform store hours, Sunday observance, the Competition Act and bail reform. We also even touched on juvenile courts, training schools, and aftercare.

All I can say is that, in a situation where we have a particular policy matter, that may be brought to our attention in various ways. We'll use an example of a delegation making a submission to us, a group of people saying that we should move in this particular area. We, as a secretariat, listen to those people.

We may listen to delegations from the other side of the question. It may be as a result of research requested or commissioned by us; we may have a report. In any event, our secretariat then sits down and discusses this. It is then that we decide that the certain appropriate minister within the policy field should draft legislation which we consider, or it could be a green paper, as the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations is doing with respect to credit reporting. Then when that is again discussed by us, and further honed by us, it goes to the policy and priorities board, which is chaired by the Premier (Mr. Davis) and of which the three policy secretaries are members, as well as the Treasurer (Mr. White) and the Chairman of the Management Board (Mr. Winkler). Then if it is approved by policies and priorities or amendments are made at that stage, it goes on to cabinet, caucus and legislation.

Mr. Cassidy: You guys are so enamoured with this process of yours, and so far it isn't yielding anything.

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): Oh, dry up!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's the procedure.

Mr. Cassidy: It's an enormous dilation of activity by the ministry with no concrete results.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I told the members about some of the priorities, as I have mentioned. There are bills that have been introduced during this current session—

Mr. Cassidy: The minister talks about the ministry and it isn't working.

Mr. Havrot: Oh, shut up!

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—and there will be more bills during this session which are the result of those policies.

Mr. Cassidy: There hasn't been one this session yet.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There have been 28 bills this session and 20 from the Justice policy field.

Mr. Cassidy: All of them insignificant.

Mr. Renwick: Not of any significance! The minister knows that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There are some. The meaty ones are still to come, I admit.

Mr. Cassidy: That's what I said, you haven't brought in one yet.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Havrot: Oh, shut up!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There's a couple of them there.

Mr. Cassidy: Where has the minister been for the last eight months?

Mr. Foulds: They were housekeeping bills. The member for Scarborough East (Mrs. Birch) seconded them.

Mr. Cassidy: He had eight months to produce these bills. Where was he?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, can you button his lip before I go over and do it?

Mr. Foulds: The minister is being provocative.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the question of organized crime, we have our inquiry. We don't like inquiries; we don't think that is the way to deal with organized crime. We would like to see evidence, charges laid and convictions. But when there isn't sufficient evidence, this is a second-best approach to ferreting out the criminal element and getting to some sort of solution to the problem as exists at the present time in the construction industry.

I don't particularly like what is going on in Quebec. I think the terms of reference of that inquiry are much too broad; too many people are being slandered, there's too much of a witch-hunt going on, and there is too much guilt by association. So, in my opinion, that type of inquiry should be avoided.

I can say to the hon. member for St. George that I haven't taken any tours, but I have as much as possible—by tours I think she means mainly of the select committee—

Mrs. Campbell: No!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Oh, I thought you were being facetious. I'm sorry.

If you mean have I visited various institutions in the province, I've been to various correctional institutions in the province, for example. I've met with people who are connected with this secretariat in an indirect way in the whole field of justice, for example.

Yes, I have met with people in different parts of the province. I am sure that I have met people who would ordinarily go to another ministry. When we meet those people the results of those meetings are then taken to our weekly policy committee meeting.

Mr. Cassidy: This is so banal it defies belief. It really is.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I asked the question—not because I hadn't read what was said here on Friday—it was because, Mr. Chairman, I really couldn't believe what I had read. Do I take it then that the Provincial Secretary of Justice forms his priorities on the basis of deputations which come with some form of complaint? Is there no one in the ministry who might in these terms think for themselves, and look at the types of legislation we have, and bring forward something to give some more human type of concept to our legislation and our legislative processes?

Must it always wait for somebody in the community to put the matter forward? And if it does, does it really honestly require this kind of money to sit down and assess the relative merits of deputations bearing briefs? And if it does, why can't it be done through a regular department rather than at this kind of an additional cost to the taxpayer?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, when I talked about deputations and submissions, I was really just trying to give one example. The way policy is formed by government is the result of a lot of input; it's input from experience, it's public opinion.

Mr. Cassidy: What arduous tasks you have.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We amend existing legislation to meet whatever the current needs are. We have talked about that tonight, for example, in respect to the Planning Act.

In commissioning research, for example from the Centre of Criminology, we feel a little ahead of public opinion in many respects. And there again, we can enact legislation or formulate policy. It is not all as a result of deputations, but all I am saying is that there is some need to co-ordinate the activities of three or four ministries within a secretariat, and this is the main purpose of the policy secretary.

If there are areas where, for example, they feel more policing or more law enforcement is needed, what effect does this have on our courts? What general effect does this have on the administration of justice, what effect does it have on our institutions as far the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps) is concerned?

Mr. Cassidy: You sound so embarrassed when you say all these things.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Those are all areas that are similar, that are part of the secretariat, and where a certain amount of leadership is necessary.

Mrs. Campbell: I wonder if I could question the minister further, Mr. Chairman? Do I take it, then, that the secretary is telling us that the thrust of recommendation 8(1) has been changed in practice; that co-ordinating related programmes of government is the top job of the secretary, rather than setting priorities and providing leadership in policy development? Is that what the secretary has just told us?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member for St. George is not trying to place priorities in the phrases within that particular paragraph. They are all equal.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, let me understand what the secretary said. I don't know much about the operation of the law, but I get the distinct impression that the secretary said you pursue the law in conjunction with the ability of the courts to handle it and the penitentiary system to hold the criminals.

That is what it sounded like to me—that you set your priorities based on whether the courts are capable of handling the additional workload and whether the correctional institutional system is sufficiently advanced to handle the additional prisoners.

Mr. Martel: Well, they've still got some vacancies.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Is that real? Is that what you meant to say, because I listened to you very carefully?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: You are putting too literal an interpretation on what I said:

Mr. Cassidy: You are being very literal tonight.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I use another example. That maybe was not a good enough example, but you are grabbing at something rather than what I am attempting to analyse and attempting to answer in the hon. members' questions. You are putting, as I say, too literal an interpretation on it.

To use another example: If we feel that the rate of recidivism is too high—

Mr. Foulds: Rate of what?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Recidivism. If it is too high, then there must be something the matter with the system.

Mr. Cassidy: What are you doing about it, then?

Mr. Renwick: You haven't got the information to make that decision.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We do have that information. This is the type of information we are after all the time. Why is it too high? Is it the courts, is it the method of law enforcement, or is it the manner in which we are operating our institutions?

Mr. Cassidy: After a year, do you have some answers?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Those things all have to be considered.

If in spite of harsher sentences, for example, people are staying longer in institutions, and yet the crime rate goes up, we should find out why. These are the areas where we should have some research; areas where all the ministries within the policy section have some interest and where we have to show some leadership and come up with some solutions.

Mr. Deans: Just for clarification, because it is interesting to me, is the crime rate going up, and have you decided whether or not it is because of longer sentences? Is it, in fact, resulting in a policy which will change the structure of the judicial system?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No.

Mr. Deans: Have you looked at the very things you have raised—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Deans:—and have you come to any conclusions? I suppose that is what we are trying to find out—whether, in the course of the time you have been in the job, you have come to any conclusions in regard to:

(a) the sentencing, and whether or not it is appropriate;

(b) the institutions, and whether they are able to do their job and whether they are doing it; and

(c) whether or not we are turning out people at the other end who have, in fact, had an opportunity to be rehabilitated and have taken advantage of the opportunity.

Have you done that kind of a study? It seems rather elementary.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is elementary. We haven't done a formal study, as outlined by the hon. member. As I say, again you are being too literal. You are taking an example and asking for information of the example.

Mr. Deans: That's what I am saying. These are examples you gave.

Mr. Cassidy: It was an example the minister gave, and we haven't found out after two days.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: All right.

Now this is again all part of the whole area. We have information. We have information on sentencing in Ontario. We have information on the rate of recidivism. We have the whole area of rehabilitation under study.

Now in some areas, for example, street crimes where victims are involved and the rate is going up, we are concerned that sentencing hasn't been consistent. There is too much difference in the sentencing for the same crime in certain parts of the province.

We are concerned about the whole area of parole and bail, and we think this is necessarily directly related with the crime rate.

On the question of juvenile crime, we are wondering if, for example, our aftercare is sufficient; whether or not the type of parole and care that young people have after they leave one of our trade schools, for example, is sufficient or should we move more and more into group homes and this type of thing.

Mr. Cassidy: Well what do you think?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: These are things we are considering. And we are considering these in light of statistics and research information that we commission outside, and information we can gather ourselves in the secretariat.

Mrs. Campbell: Could I ask a question following that?

Mr. Chairman: On this point? All right!

Mrs. Campbell: Is the secretary beginning now to deal in a qualitative analysis of justice rather than the quantitative, merchandising type of justice analysis that has gone on in this government?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would say yes.

Mrs. Campbell: Good!

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I have to associate myself with a few of the remarks the member for Riverdale made with regard to checkerboarding and land division and the Planning Act. But I also want to emphasize that I was not happy with the decision that was made by the courts on the stated 10 questions, because quite frankly I was very much disturbed when I saw the court interpretation in relation to this Legislature's intent. It seems to me that what was set up here was a very rare situation for a British parliamentary system, and much more to the intent and method of a congressional system in the republican form of government. When one saw the court interpretation, it was somewhat different than what the Legislature had in intent on any basic law.

It seemed to me that this was quite a difference and one that our cabinet should have immediately done certain things about. We have only a few members in this House who are affected to any great extent by this checkerboarding. There are a few minor cases involving a few members, but there are three or four here who are very basically involved with several hundred titles.

It seems to me also that this whole matter and the discussion that has been taken place with the policy secretary is one that should have been dealt with by the ministry responsible for the Planning Act. And further, much as I agree with the member for St. George in this regard, much of the discussion here tonight should have been undertaken under the estimates of the various ministries rather than with this minister, because really it hasn't been policy, it has been matters of money and estimates. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

There is one thing I think that I do have a responsibility to bring to the attention of the Justice secretary, and it's as a result of a dialogue I got into with the judiciary in Thunder Bay, as well as many people who are in the legal field in Thunder Bay. There has been considerable dialogue here, and in this Legislature, about the abolition of grand juries across the province. As a matter of fact I think one of the grand juries sitting around Metropolitan Toronto has asked that they be legislated out of business.

The legal fraternity in Thunder Bay feel very strongly that the grand jury system should be continued. They give two reasons for it, and they have asked me to quote from remarks that were made by Justice Holland, who was appointed just a short time ago.

In addressing the grand jury and calling the roll, he went back into the historical background for setting up grand juries. He went back even before the Norman conquest. He drew their attention to the fact that he was bringing Queen's justice to the area, and he told them that no one should be put through a trial unless there is some case against them. He said it was their job to decide whether or not there is sufficient evidence to warrant a person going on trial.

The legal people in northwestern Ontario feel very strongly that there is a need for the continuation of that kind of scrutiny.

In addition to that, he said that a most important function of the grand jury is the inspection of public institutions. The people in northwestern Ontario feel very strongly that you need a body that will go around and inspect these institutions, whether they be the jails or whether they be institutions where people are held for rehabilitation purposes. He felt, and the judiciary and the legal fraternity of northwestern Ontario, felt, that this was something that was worthwhile continuing.

He says:

I have the power to deal with any man in that jail, and if there is something wrong, let me know. This is a most important duty.

Mr. Justice Holland told jurors to question inmates of the jails in the absence of officials in case they might be afraid to answer honestly while being supervised.

He went on to say:

You must also inspect the building, the facilities and food—look for fire escapes, for example—and report to me. Grand jurors will be provided with lists of all the public institutions in the Thunder Bay district and the last date on which they were examined.

The judge advised them particularly to inspect homes for the aged.

Mr. Justice Holland expressed his regret in hearing talk about doing away with the grand jury, and he said it would be a sad thing as they can do a lot of good, especially in regard to public institutions.

So on their behalf, and on behalf of all citizens in northwestern Ontario, I would like to ask the minister for the Justice policy field to assure the people that, at least in northwestern Ontario, the grand jury system will continue; and hopefully those to whom they are reporting will be much more responsive to the recommendation they are making for improvement in the judiciary system and the rehabilitation system in that part of the province.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I might just very briefly say that the public review committee, which will replace the grand jury, will in fact inspect all public buildings in the same way as the grand jury has been doing. The main reason that McRuer recommended this change be made was that the grand jury really had a dual function. As well as inspecting buildings and commenting on those, it also reviewed bills of indictment. This will not be taken on by the public review commission; this will be done by way of preliminary hearing, or there may be an amendment to the Code to, in some way, fill this vacuum.

Mr. Stokes: Pardon me, just for clarification on the function of reviewing bills of indictment: How do you propose specifically to fill the role that was formerly—or is presently—being filled by the grand jury? Have you consulted with the legal fraternity in all areas of the province to see what is their opinion? They are closer to it than any of us, much closer even than you people are sitting down here.

The legal fraternity up there felt that it fills a very badly needed role and does it quite adequately. I wonder why you would seek to change something which in their opinion works so very well. Just because McRuer suggests it, it doesn't necessarily mean that it is valid for all parts of the province.

They felt very strongly about it when I spoke to them and they said I had the authority to speak for all the legal people in north-western Ontario. That was their feeling and they felt very strongly about it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: All I would say, Mr. Chairman, is that I think in time the fraternity in Thunder Bay will accept a new change.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa Centre. Is your question on the grand jury?

Mr. Cassidy: No, it isn't.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville has something on the same question.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): I wanted to ask the minister, Mr. Chairman, what disposition is made of the recommendations of the grand jury?

I am specifically referring to my own local area where the grand jury has been meeting, and has submitted reports one year ago, in January of this year and again in April of this year, recommending or suggesting that facilities were not adequate as far as the administration of justice was concerned in the community; that there was need for a floor to be added to the present county courthouse; and likewise that the amount of funds or the moneys paid to jurors was absolutely not in keeping with the cost of living today.

I brought to the attention of the Attorney General the case of a fellow who had been on welfare, got off welfare and worked as a barkeep in a hotel. Because he was called to grand jury he was only paid $10 a day—he lost $19 a day—and on $10 a day he could not get by at all. All you were really doing was forcing him back on welfare by not providing him with sufficient funds to be able to get by. The $10 a day certainly was completely out of tune with the times.

It was absolutely inadequate. In a case such as I mentioned—of the fellow by the name of Bob Bailey, in which it was a real hardship to the individual—there should be some accommodation made or some discretion given to the court in the city to compensate the individual so that you would keep him off welfare.

I am particularly interested in your reply to what is going to happen to the county courthouse. Are you going to provide additional facilities by adding another floor?

You are the policy minister so I would assume that any decision would eventually have to be made by you rather than by the Attorney General. Does the Attorney General mean that he will be making the decision rather than the policy minister as to the need for facilities? Is that what he is telling me by nodding?

I will ask the policy minister at this time concerning the two issues that I raised—the need for additional facilities and the pay to jurors.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As the Attorney General's nod indicated, this really is something that will be decided within his particular budget provisions.

Mr. Lawlor: That is one of the reasons you are going to abolish them, though; They are a thorn in your side.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is true that grand juries year after year bring down reports indicating that the facilities are archaic and they need to be replaced. If we tried to comply with every request of every grand jury, we would outspend even the Minister of Health (Mr.

Potter), I am sure. As you know, it was just a few years ago that the province took over these facilities and the administration of justice in that area, and all of a sudden we had to replace a number of old courthouses.

All I can say is that it must be done within whatever budgetary restrictions we might have. I think it is fair to say that when we do have reports from grand juries we do what we can to at least renovate and make sure the building is safe, that it can be used and that there are proper facilities for jurors and witnesses and the personnel involved in conducting hearings, as well as sheriff's staff and other personnel.

As far as jurors' fees are concerned, I am sure the Attorney General will agree with me that they need revamping. The fees are too low, and I give him credit, he has recommended an increase in fees, and I anticipate that there will be an increase in jurors' fees.

I would just like to make this one comment though, there is a certain social responsibility for all of us, even those of us with exemptions, to make some sacrifice in respect of the administration of justice. I don't think it should be as great as it is now as far as jurors' fees are concerned, but there is this obligation on people to serve on juries and help facilitate court hearings and the administration of justice. Having said that, I hope that there will be an increase in jurors' fees.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I do accept the fact that there is a responsibility on the citizen, but when the citizen is being deprived of an opportunity of a livelihood and is being forced on welfare, and when he does have difficulty with the welfare system, then what are you doing to him? You are really penalizing him. I think you have got to fairly well judge each case on its merits.

Mr. Minister, you did mention that the recommendations of the grand jury always depend on the financial resources of the department or the government. That is true. But when you listen to a recommendation such as this, concerning the provincial jail—to improve the recreational facilities, that is exercise, and hardtop the recreation area; the existing area is probably sand—there isn't much in the way of funds required to come along and implement such a recommendation. Another is, if it is not possible to leave the individual's cell doors open during the day, more seating facilities should be made available in the cell block. These don't involve a lot of money, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Order please, those are fitting questions to be asked of the minister responsible.

Mr. B. Newman: So I ask the minister in all sincerity to look at the recommendations of the grand jury very seriously and implement at least those that are not involving large expenditures of funds, and implement them as soon as you possibly can.

Mr. Chairman: Order please.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Those are more fitting to be under the estimates of the Minister of Correctional Services than they are to this minister.

Mr. B. Newman: All right, I will ask exactly the same thing under Correctional Services. I wanted to conclude with the minister here and tell him to—

Mr. Chairman: You have my permission.

Mr. B. Newman: —to at least take into consideration the recommendations that I put forth in this House.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage the minister, if you will, in broad questions of social philosophy about social justice, in which I hope he would feel engaged as the policy minister, the Provincial Secretary for Justice. Before I go into that I would just like to say a word.

I wasn't fortunate enough to be in the House here on Friday, but I did read the debate and thought that after some of the comments there the minister might have tried to show a better face to the House tonight and during the course of these estimates. But in fact, as he was seeking to justify what he did to the members on this side of the Legislature and to the hon. member for St. George, he writhed and entangled himself in his own machinery, with policy committees and delegations and this sort of thing. You can see the diagram of it all happening with nothing coming out, and that really worries me.

I thought that the minister might have taken some guidance from what the House was saying to him on Friday and might have been able to tell us. But in fact, any time he came close to brushing with specifics and he was asked about specifics from this side of the House he said, "Oh no, that is just an example." And he has not yet, Mr. Chairman, introduced a specific policy recommendation or a specific kind of study which will guide the ministry or the various ministries in this policy field arising out of the activities of his super ministry.

If he wants guidance on how to spend $350,000 well, in fact, a single $7,000 or $8,000 employee in one or two of the departments of government spends, or is responsible for spending, that much money in a year—and we don't need a $40,000 minister. So I came in fairly charitably disposed, but I'm not so sure right now.

I rather tend to think that the leader of my party (Mr. Lewis) is perfectly right; that $1, if the minister was really prepared to work for that, would be about what his product in the job has been worth. Perhaps he will take this debate to heart and, since the Premier hasn't yet shown any disposition to get rid of the policy secretariat, begin to show us some value for the money that we are spending.

Mr. Foulds: The minister has lost heart since he was demoted from the Ministry of the Environment.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member does know that the motion was made to vote 1101?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I realize that.

Mr. Chairman: The amendment was made to vote 1101.

Mr. Cassidy: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Chairman: Not in the statutory amount.

Mr. Cassidy: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Chairman: The amendment was made to vote 1101, not to the statutory amount of the minister's salary.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh! In other words he would be paid to administer $1 worth of expenditure, rather than $358,000?

Mr. Chairman: No, I just wanted to make sure the member understood that the amendment that was made was for the $343,000, not the $15,000.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, I did read the debate carefully. I'm sorry that we didn't include a reduction in the minister's salary, but I suppose that's a tribute to the work that he has done in previous ministries in the past. It is the sort of charitable kind of favour one shows to a long-standing employee of whom one hopes better in the future on the basis of the record in the past.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister about the question of landlord and tenant law and landlord and tenant law reform. It's a field which unfortunately he did not mention on Friday in outlining some of the areas in which he was engaged in and thinking about as policy minister.

I'm directing these questions to him because they are a matter of social justice, or social philosophy, and because of the inadequate replies of other ministers of the government in the past. In other words, I'm going as near to the top as seems appropriate.

I'd like to ask him, in fact, whether he has given any consideration to the imbalance of rights or of power which currently exist in this province between tenants on the one hand and landlords on the other.

Mr. Chairman, the minister said that he listens to deputations. I don't know if the thought ever crossed his mind, but he might have wondered at some point why he doesn't see deputations of tenants. There is a good reason for that. And that is that the powerlessness of tenants in urban areas of Ontario today has put them in a position where most tenants are deathly afraid of getting together and organizing to a point where they bring a deputation to your superministry, or to some other ministry in the Justice field; because the moment they show that kind of activity they are liable to be victimized, evicted or otherwise mistreated by their landlords. And they have literally no right of redress under Ontario law.

In fact, the only tenants who are organized are tenants in Ontario Housing Corp. housing; and they do enjoy a certain security of tenure and some protection from this Legislature in their discussions with the OHC.

It's now about 3½ years, Mr. Chairman, since the Landlord and Tenant Act amendment which came into force in 1970 passed through this Legislature; and the minister is probably aware just how ineffective those Landlord and Tenant Act amendments have been.

In Ottawa, as in other parts of the province, the tribunals which were to be set up under that Act in order to mediate disputes between landlord and tenants have proven to be totally ineffective. They've proven to be ineffective because they didn't have any teeth.

In Ottawa the tribunal functioned for a few months. It heard a few cases; it worried about its liability in case of suits and that kind of thing. It ultimately heard no more than about three or four cases. In those cases the landlords generally refused to appear. I think its track record was one, and one only, case successfully resolved.

The members of the landlord and tenant tribunal resigned in disgust because of their ineffectiveness—the fact they felt they could do no good. All that has arisen from the Act in the Ottawa area has been as follows: There is now one employee who was responsible for giving information to landlords—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member now is talking about an operating ministry—

Mr. Cassidy: Pardon?

Mr. Chairman: You are now talking about an operating ministry. His responsibility—

Mr. Cassidy: No, I'm not, Mr. Chairman. I'm talking about the results of the social philosophy of this government.

Mr. Chairman: But you had been talking about the operation and administration of a particular Act.

Mr. Cassidy: No, this is not even operated under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, but you had been talking—

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): It is pretty obvious to us.

Mr. Cassidy: This is a provincial Act, which is the responsibility of the policy minister and his field ministers.

Mr. Chairman: It isn't his responsibility. He is responsible for policy, not for the actual operation or administration of the Act—

Mr. Cassidy: I'm suggesting that the policy of the minister has proved ineffective and—

Mr. Chairman: —that is the responsibility of the Attorney General and much more fittingly should be discussed under his estimates.

Mr. Cassidy: All right, I'll talk in a more general vein, Mr. Chairman. As I suggested, the tribunals have failed. I'm sure the minister is aware of that; I don't need to go into it any more. I'll mention briefly another aspect: The courts, in administering the Act, have proved themselves biased against tenants. The problems landlords had in getting recourse to the Act have generally been resolved. The problems the tenants have had have not been resolved.

In another area in which the minister has general policy responsibility there has been no action and no changes; that is, the attitude of the police toward disputes involving landlords and tenants. The police have taken the view that these are civil matters and they have permitted evictions to take place. They have not interfered with what amounts to assaults by landlords under the Act. They have washed their hands and told tenants to seek civil recourse at a time when brute force was being used upon them through evictions on to the street, with the consequent disruptive effects on them and their families. The police have simply not interfered, and there has been no policy direction from the minister.

Mr. Foulds: It's all the fault of the member for Timiskaming, who isn't here.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, in the field of labour legislation, which is not under this ministry, there has been an effort to try to regulate the power and responsibilities of the two parties involved, labour and management. In industries which are organized there is a certain balance—the right to strike and the right to lock out; the right of workers to organize and certain rights which are left with management, known as management rights. In the area of unorganized labour, Mr. Chairman, the government has stepped in to ensure certain minimal rights to workers—hours of work, minimum wage, paid holidays and that kind of thing. In other words, there's been an attempt, however faulty, to bring in economic justice for people in the work place.

What I'm asking, Mr. Chairman, is whether the minister is prepared to ensure social and economic justice for tenants in their dwelling place or whether the Ontario government intends to simply leave the current laissez-faire, free-market situation as it's called, which is having intolerable effects on tenants in Ottawa, Toronto and any other major urban place here in the Province of Ontario.

The government approach up until now has been that landlords and tenant should simply reason together. It is an approach which is becoming increasingly out of step with the approach being taken to landlord-tenant problems in other jurisdictions—Nova Scotia, Quebec, Manitoba, Massachusetts, New York and, in fact, the entire United States under the American President's doctrines, as well as European countries.

Ontario is out of step, and the result is that tenants don't have any rights. I'm asking whether the superminister would consider giving tenants some essential rights to correct the imbalance of power that they suffer from right now—their inability to fight against evictions, arbitrary rent increases, refusals to repair, illegal entry, changing of locks, inadequate heat, refusal to obey municipal by-laws on the part of landlords.

I'm asking whether the minister will redress the imbalance of power so that tenants can approach landlords as equals and not in the unequal position that they are in right now. I don't even want to give examples. I've given examples in Throne Speeches debates and in other places, and many other members on this side of the House have given example after example after example of the kinds of problems that tenants suffer.

But I'm asking whether the government can climb off the heartless kind of policy which it has right now, which is that half of the population of the province are homeowners and therefore their interests should be protected; and the other half of the province are tenants and all we will do is civilize our relationship, which is basically that of the jungle, by ensuring that when they are evicted it will be at the end of a lease or with one month's notice.

I would like to ask the minister specifically what changes he has been studying in the landlord-tenant area. I'd like to know specifically whether he will consider granting a security of tenure for tenants, in order to give them the kind of equality of rights in approaching their landlord that they do not now enjoy; whether he will consider permitting evictions only by order either of the courts or of a landlord-tenant tribunal which I would hope he would set up; and whether he will consider that evictions should be allowed only for certain specific reasons such as abuse of the property, over-crowding, non-payment of rent, uses which are immoral, or possibly a requirement by the landlord to occupy the premises either for himself or for very near relatives.

These are not radical ideas imported from Europe or some place like that, Mr. Chairman. In fact, these have been the principles which have governed landlord-tenant legislation in the Province of Quebec for the last 20-odd years under governments just as conservative as the one we have opposite.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister can answer those questions and maybe one or two that follow.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Go ahead.

Mr. Cassidy: No, I'd like to see some response from the secretary.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Put them all on.

Mr. Chairman: If the minister does not want to give the answers now, the member should go ahead and ask any other questions. He'll sum them all up at the end.

Mr. Cassidy: No. My questions are all to do with landlord-and-tenant laws. If I have any subsequent questions they would be dealing with another subject.

Mr. Chairman: Have you got some other questions?

Mr. Deans: That's not the way the estimates are normally conducted. A member asks a question and he gets an answer.

Mr. Chairman: The minister has the right—

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Chairman: The minister has the right to decide whether he wants to answer or he doesn't want to. And he doesn't want to; he wants to hear all the questions.

Mr. Deans: The general custom in the Legislature in dealing with the estimates is that members have engaged in a question-and-answer period in which they asked a question and the minister answered, and they were not obligated to put all their questions at one time.

Mr. Lawlor: Have you done the estimates before, Bill?

Mr. Deans: This is the way—

Mr. Chairman: Neither is the minister obligated to answer any question.

Mr. Foulds: He hasn't for two days, why should he start now?

Mr. Deans: In fact, I think you are wrong. In the estimates the minister is, in fact, obligated to answer questions.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Mr. Deans: The purpose of the estimates is so that the minister can be questioned about the expenditures. It is his obligation to answer the questions as they are asked, or to prove to us that he doesn't know the answer, which may well be the case.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): You know that's not true.

Mr. Deans: That has been the custom over the last five years.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, in order to save time and silly childish bickering—

Mr. Deans: Answer the questions, then.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —I'll deal with the points raised by the last speaker. As the hon. member knows, there were substantial amendments and changes in the landlord-and-tenant legislation in the Act of 1968. This was as a result of recommendations from the Law Reform Commission. That Act pretty well, in our opinion at that time, was in fact a bill of rights for tenants. Since that time there have been at least two amendments that I am aware of, indicating that the Act is continuously being reviewed and continuously being updated.

Mr. Lawlor: It is detrimental to the tenant.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I felt, and I think this House felt, that the Act in 1968, certainly when it was brought in, was fair.

Mr. Lawlor: It was an excellent Act.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There was an equal balance between the landlord and the tenant. It was felt this would be conducive to some type of harmony in the whole area of leased premises.

I think the hon. member made a good point when he indicated that these tribunals or advisory bureaux that were set up, I believe at the municipal level, haven't been all that successful. I will admit that I think in some ways there has been some misconception of the role of the advisory bureau. There has been the conception that it is in fact some sort of a tribunal which has the powers to make decisions, vis-à-vis a landlord and a tenant. In fact, it is what it says it is—an advisory bureau. It isn't in a position to override the contractual relations between a landlord and tenant and it just attempts to—

Mr. Cassidy: And therefore it can't get them out?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's right. It tries to iron out the differences of opinion which have developed between a landlord and tenant.

As you know, over time a certain amount of bitterness will develop. If a landlord feels that a tenant is destructive—that is, his children in some way are destructive—if he is annoying other tenants in the building; if there are complaints; if there is an attitude that he will reluctantly pay his rent on the first day of the month when it is due and there is a pattern of late payment, you can see a certain feeling developing between the landlord and tenant. This takes place. It's hard to legislate human relations that develop in situations like that.

I think, for example, of one of the remedies that we talked about in 1968 which, possibly, should have been brought into effect or, at least, had more thought given to it. That is the idea of a uniform type of lease instead of having leases which are drawn up pretty well on an individual basis, in which terms will differ from community to community depending on the type of premises or whoever the landlord may be, and in which the small print is too small. That is where the balance is in favour of the landlord.

It takes a Philadelphia lawyer really to understand all the terms of a lease and certainly the conditions and regulations which are set out in these small stationery store forms.

Mr. Foulds: How about a Burlington lawyer?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: These are areas which I think we should continue to move into. It worries me when the hon. member makes the broad blanket statement that courts are biased against tenants. I don't think you can make that statement.

Mr. Deans: People are afraid to go to court.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There may be a problem with a certain judge or a certain court in Ottawa which may not be a problem in Toronto or Hamilton or Windsor.

Mr. Cassidy: It is a consistent pattern—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think the courts are attempting to interpret a contractual relation between a landlord and tenant, at the same time trying to apply the facts that exist in respect of the terms of that contract.

I am concerned about the fact that people overhold and don't realize it. They have a lease, it expires; the landlord sometimes knows that and likes the situation better when he has a monthly tenant instead of somebody who has a particular contract, knowing that it may be easier to get rid of that tenant by way of 30-day notice.

These things concern me. I think there is a certain obligation on the tenant to know his rights. At the same time, I think there is some onus on the landlord to say, "Now our contractual relationship has been terminated we should enter into another one." The question of whether or not there should be automatic renewal depends a great deal, I think, on the relationship or the history of that tenant.

As I say, if he is somebody who has been a problem in the building, as far as other tenants are concerned—he hasn't necessarily been in breach of some provision of the lease—but if he has been a continuous problem in the building, therefore affecting the other units in the building which may be vacant because of the situation; he may be a tenant who has, as I say, no respect for the property of others, there should be some right left with the landlord to make a decision on whether or not he wants to renew that lease.

Now it may be that this is the type of thing that should be considered by a tribunal—where there should be one, as the hon. member indicated, as in the field of labour. You know, this still is a question of a private relationship; we're still dealing with private property.

If the landlord in this province is encumbered and inhibited by all kinds of government regulations—over and above our basic concept of what should be the landlord and tenant relation—you just won't get landlords and you won't get the type of accommodation that is required so urgently in this province.

Mr. Deans: Speak to your friend, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman).

Mr. Cassidy: The minister says we are still dealing with private property, and I think he reflects the problems that the government suffers from, which is that it just doesn't move in the same kind of circles that members from this side move in, who have day-to-day contact with tenants and with the kind of problems that they have.

You are dealing with people's lives, Mr. Minister, and not just private property. If you are concerned about leaving the contractual relationship between equal partners, that is between commercial landlords and commercial tenants, or industrial landlords and industrial tenants in the free-market system, so be it. Both parties on that side have got legal advice; they have relatively equal strength, equal talents and equal profit interests. But in the case of private tenants—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Laughren: The anti-labour rump again!

Mr. Cassidy: It really is. The rump, Mr. Chairman, keeps on protesting because they too feel that private property is more important than people's lives. The minister says, for example, that the advisory tribunals, or advisory committees, were needed in order to intervene in a case where the tenant was being a bit late with the rent—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Stokes: The Minister of Government Services (Mr. Snow) shouldn't be speaking at all; he is not in his seat. You can only speak from your own seat.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy:—when the tenant was paying the rent quite on time or the landlord wasn't—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy:—and that somehow sweet light and reason would prevail through this being taken before the landlord and tenant advisory tribunal.

Mr. Chairman, what happened just this month in my riding, when a tenant sought some action from a landlord and complained to a government body is that that tenant got evicted.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister talks with some sympathy.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: You need a court order to get evicted.

Mr. Cassidy: What? No.

An hon. member: Sure you do!

Mr. Cassidy: You do not have to get a court order to get evicted; and I think it's a shocking fact that the minister did not know.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes you do.

Mr. Cassidy: If the tenant resists, you need a court order to evict. However the eviction notice can be given and the tenant must be out at the end of the month.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: An eviction notice given by whom?

Mr. Cassidy: By the landlord. All it needs is 30 days' notice.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's a normal expiration of a lease.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. Okay. Many people in this province—if the minister wasn't aware of it—still live on monthly tenancy. The court order is required, Mr. Chairman, in order to enforce an eviction; the tenant however has virtually no redress or recourse against the court hearing in order to prove that he should not be evicted, because there were no grounds in the Act.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Oh, baloney!

Mr. Cassidy: The only grounds in the Act are where a tenant has raised this particular complaint to a governmental authority where there had been a landlord and tenant dispute, and I know of no cases—unless the minister could bring out some examples—where that has been successful and where the tenant in future had quiet enjoyment of the property.

In the case which I have before me, the family in Ottawa, I think they probably have a case which a fair court might grant to them; it might refuse the eviction order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: But the courts aren't fair—is that what you are saying?

Mr. Cassidy: Not in our experience in my riding, Mr. Chairman. The courts are not fair. However, that tenant faces the risk, if he loses, of getting evicted on to the street the next day by the courts. He doesn't know what is going to happen. In the meantime, his own personal life is disrupted. All the landlord faces is the risk of losing one or two months' rent. And if he has several properties, then it's not really a harm to him.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the minister that he is quite right in saying that when a tenant is disruptive in the building and is causing disorder, or isn't paying his rent, or in other ways is not living up to his obligations, then the landlord should have the right to be quit of that tenant; I thoroughly agree with the minister. But I ask him, in view of that rather sensitive statement of his, why is it that he is not willing to protect the 90, 95 or 98 per cent of tenants who, in fact, live up to those obligations? Why does he leave the doors wide open to landlords to evict or otherwise victimize their tenants in order to protect that right that he feels a landlord should have to evict in cases where tenants are being disruptive or are being seriously behind in their rent or whatever the particular thing happens to be? Landlords do throw people out, as the member for Lakeshore has commented, and it happens with 30 days' notice. Well, what good is that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. Cassidy: Call the new leader of the rump to order will you, Mr. Chairman?

I would like to point out, too, to the minister that another power that landlords have which can have an equally disruptive effect on tenants is the power to arbitrarily raise rents to a level which a tenant cannot afford. I have had a number of instances of rent increases of $30 and $40 in my riding in recent months. The other day I had one of a 50 per cent increase, from $230 a month to $350 a month for an ordinary three-bedroom house occupied by a university teacher and a young son.

Mr. Lawlor: They might have charged more!

Mr. Cassidy: That is right, why not more?

Mr. Chairman, that rent increase has the effect of an eviction. It is an economic means of forcing a tenant out; and it is used again and again and again. It is used for speculative purposes and it is thoroughly unjustifiable, as far as the view of this party is concerned.

As far as we are concerned, it is part of the tenant's rights. A tenant should have the right of redress, the right to go and appeal what he considers to be an unjustifiable increase in rent. While he should negotiate it with the landlord, he should be able to take it to a landlord and tenant tribunal. That in no way interferes with the landlord's right, as the minister mentioned, to get rid of somebody who it can be demonstrated is hurting the property or who is not keeping up with the rent payments or who is using the place for immoral purposes or putting 22 people in a house meant for five.

Mr. Lawlor: He should be made to show cause.

Mr. Cassidy: That is right. He should be made to show cause, just as he should be made to show cause for any arbitrary kind of increase in rent.

I would just like to conclude, Mr. Chairman, by talking about the concept of tenants getting together. When workers get together to form a union, there is a certain protection in the law which protects them against being fired for being engaged in union activity.

That doesn't exist in the case of tenants. In this age of large corporate landlords, developers, and people like that, you have developers or landlords who deal with hundreds and even thousands of tenants and are dealing with tenants as individuals.

The minister is sufficiently familiar with labour legislation to know that it doesn't work there, and I am sure he can draw the parallel, nor does it work in the case of landlord-tenant relations. It is obvious that tenants are weak and landlords are strong so long as tenants have to deal with the landlord as individuals. So long as they face a lease expiring at the end of the week or the end of the year they cannot risk being seen to be in a leadership position, organizing a tenants' union and seeking to have bargaining with the landlord.

We happen to feel that one of the alternatives open to tenants should be the power to get together to form a workable tenants' association, an association to be able to talk with landlords where there are common grievances, whether it is about common areas badly maintained or a laundry room out of kilter, the heat out of whack, or to talk about rent. If tenants wish, they should be able to bargain collectively with their landlords. In many cases, it won't come to that, Mr. Chairman. However, that range of options ought to be open.

The kind of power relationships that exist between landlords and tenants have to be equalized for that to occur. In order for that to occur, that means that the tenants must be protected against arbitrary rent increases that can't be justified on the basis of cost. It means the tenants must have the kind of security that the minister and I apparently both agree about, that is, a security which can be broken only by showing cause, by court order or tribunal order. The cause would be such things as refusal to pay rent or immoral activities or destruction of the property. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, maybe the minister and I are more on a common wavelength than I thought on entering this debate but I may have talked myself into that position and I would appreciate his reply.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, on the same point very briefly indeed; you are aware that British Columbia, of recent date, in order to give security of tenure, has made it obligatory that for 12-month periods at a time, written into leases, are no rent increases but all other grounds subsist for getting rid of an obnoxious tenant. The device of increasing the rent exorbitantly to drive a tenant out is not allowed in that particular jurisdiction. It's been true for the whole time in Quebec. In terms of straight equity, in terms of the policy of the ministry I would ask you to give some consideration to that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the last point of course, if people enter into a lease—

Mr. Lawlor: Well, a lease, yes, there would be exceptions.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —you have a security of tenure.

Mr. Deans: There are escalator clauses in the leases which the tenant really doesn't have access to.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I mentioned that the terms of a lease should be fairly clear. Certainly, some of the small print is not clear particularly where it is under the heading of rules and regulations. It's a little too balanced in favour of the landlord. I agree with that.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, they don't give leases any more. Once a lease has expired, they go to a monthly tenancy.

Mr. Deans: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Of course, this is a problem when you have a housing shortage. When you have a shortage of available units that people can afford, the landlord feels he can carry on without a lease.

Mr. Cassidy: We have had that for seven years.

Mr. Lawlor: The most defenceless ought not to bear the brunt.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: At the same time there is a certain advantage to the landlord as well as the tenant to have a lease. Don't forget you have a situation in some areas, particularly where the rent is fairly high, or—I was going to say, furnished, but really in an unfurnished situation—I can imagine all kinds of situations in which an honest, sincere landlord can be—

Mr. Chairman: Could we have some order in the House, to let the minister speak and be heard, please.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —put to some monetary loss and a great deal of inconvenience. If you have people staying in a place who, as I say, are not good tenants or are in arrears of their rents—sometimes they can work it so that they can be as much as three months in arrears before they can be evicted. This can happen.

Mr. Lawlor: That's pretty hard to do now with your laws.

Mr. Cassidy: It takes 15 days.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, I think if the tenant is that type of person and is willing to scheme to that extent, it can still be done. I'm sure it is still being done.

Mr. Lawlor: Naive landlord.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: At the same time, the whole problem here is to maintain a reasonable balance between the landlord and tenant and try to make sure that the rights of each are clear and reasonable and just.

I think there should be more leases. I think that the leases should be more and more uniform so that the tenant, particularly the one who probably doesn't pay enough attention to the lease, can know what his rights are and what his obligations are under a lease. We have done away with certain things such as security deposits and things like that. I think that was a big step and one that many landlords, of course, objected to, because people could move out without notice, and leave a great deal of damage and there was no recourse.

In this whole area it is important that there be reasonable balance. As I said earlier, we have a relatively new Act with new amendments and I am sure we will be continuously amending that bill to update it; if there are injustices I think they can be corrected.

Now the landlord and tenant advisory bureau is set up mainly to assist tenants. Possibly there should be a little more power than its strictly advisory role. But at the same time, I can't help feeling that a person who rents property, who was able to get a lease, who knows his rights and is prepared to live in that particular dwelling as if it was his own, shouldn't have any trouble with a reasonable honest landlord.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, Mr. Minister!

Mr. Lawlor: I detect a certain naivety there!

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville. Would the member for Windsor-Walkerville like to speak in this debate?

Oh okay; the member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: I just want to talk for a moment about the whole area of a standardized lease form, because it has bothered me for the last six or seven years that in the Province of Ontario there are so many of these stationery store leases around. Most of them contain something called an escalator clause, and this clause permits the landlord to raise rents during the term of the lease in the event of things such as an increase in fuel costs, an increase in taxes or an increase in general maintenance costs of the building.

Now this simply affords many landlords the opportunity, of which they take full advantage, to raise the rent between the starting and termination date of the lease. I have felt for a long time that the Province of Ontario should have something called a standard form of lease; and that standard form of lease should set out the various clauses which are acceptable within this province. And nothing else should be accepted; that should be the standard form for this province, for all rental properties. Then no matter in which building a person lives or to which landlord he may be in servitude, he knows exactly what he has signed and what kind of leeway he has.

An hon. member: Servitude?

Mr. Lawlor: It comes to resemble that!

Mr. Deans: I think the minister fails to recognize some rather basic points about the relationship between the landlord and the tenant.

When the tenant goes down to the washing area to wash his or her clothes and finds that the machines aren't working, there is nothing he can do. He may call the landlord. The landlord will say: "Don't worry, we're going to get it fixed." And you know in that old term, "in the fullness of time," it's repaired.

Or when the tenant goes down and can't get into the parking lot because it hasn't been cleared of snow and he complains to the caretaker. The caretaker says: "Don't worry we're going to get it done." And gradually, the spring comes, the snow disappears. There is no way that tenant can get at that landlord to have the work done.

Mr. J. A. Taylor (Prince Edward-Lennox): It is an exaggeration.

Mr. Deans: It's an exaggeration? You obviously live some place where there are very few apartments.

Mr. Lawlor: He lives where there is no snow.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: Or when a tenant finds that the regulation with regard to heat is not being lived up to, and he can prove that he is only getting 66 deg. He still has to take some legal action in order to get the landlord to comply with the law. Now you can imagine—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Deans: You're wrong again, you're always wrong. It's amazing you ever got here. How can someone who's so stupid be in the Legislature?

Isn't it interesting to note—

Mr. Taylor: Who are you addressing?

Mr. Cassidy: All of you.

Mr. Deans: Would you talk to your friends and ask them to go out for a while?

It seems to me the government fails to understand the problem the majority of people have in the province. The majority of people don't like to go to court. And even if they were to go to court with these rather minor breaches of the contract, they would find, in essence, that the court would take so long to deal with them that by the time they got around to it the problem would have either resolved itself or have been resolved.

Mr. Lawlor: It would cost more money than it was worth.

Mr. Deans: And the landlord knows full well that this individual isn't going to take a day off work at the possible loss of $35, more or less, in order to go into court to have him fix a washing machine, or to have him scrape the parking lot, or to have him fix the heat so that he can get enough heat. And this is what's basically wrong with the whole situation.

This tenant should be able to call the advisory bureau, and that advisory bureau should have on its staff people of sufficient knowledge to be able to go to the building, assess whether or not the complaint is legitimate and order that the work be done. The tenant should have the right, on a pro-rated basis, to deduct for every day that whatever it is is not provided, an appropriate amount of rental; so that the landlord knows that if he doesn't provide the things that are set out either in the lease or by understanding of the tenant at the time that he entered into the lease, that he is going to lose not only the rental from that tenant, or the portion of the rental from that tenant, but he is going to lose the portion of the rental from every other tenant in the building who also doesn't have the appropriate amenities provided for him.

This is what you have got to do in the whole area of landlord-tenant relations. You have got to ensure that the landlord in fact does provide the smaller things. It is not a matter of whether the tenant is being evicted. The eviction is obvious and can be dealt with, and the member for Ottawa Centre set it out very nicely. But the problem, frankly, is in providing the comforts that are set out in the lease, or the understanding of lease. It is the providing of the necessities. It is making sure that the littler things that are most difficult to force on the landlord are in fact provided without the tenant having to go through all the process of the law.

I think this is really what we are saying here—that if you had a standard lease first of all, and if you did have an advisory bureau that had the capacity to make investigations and order that certain matters within the lease be complied with, then I don't think we would be faced with nearly as many difficulties.

If you carry it one step further and ensure in the standard lease that there is no provision for increases of rental during the period of the lease; and if you carry it even one step further and guarantee that in a period when the minister himself has stated there is a housing shortage, and when the minister himself has stated landlords are in fact taking advantage of the imbalance in the available number of accommodations over and against the numbers of people who are looking for accommodation, and you institute in the Province of Ontario on a trial basis, in some municipality, some form of rental control, so that in fact any landlord who wants to raise his rent has to prove that the amount of the increase is justified—this is the key to all landlord-tenant relations.

There isn't a tenant anywhere who isn't prepared to pay, or at least to try to pay, an increase in rent if the landlord can justify the increase. If the landlord says, "Look, my taxes have gone up by X numbers of dollars per unit and there it is; my heating costs have gone up by X number of dollars per year and there it is—"

Mr. Renwick: Or, "I've been taxed on energy."

Mr. Deans: Or, "I've been taxed on energy," as my colleague from Riverdale says.

Hopefully, of course, the government will see the error of that and will correct it before this legislation is completed.

Mr. Renwick: They'll be withdrawing that.

Mr. Deans: But if the tenant had the right to question the landlord as to the validity of the increase involved, then I feel that you would find fewer complaints in the area of the landlord and tenant over the matter of rent. I do feel that the tenant doesn't have access to the kind of information that he has to have in order to make a proper judgement.

There is no question when the landlord says, "I am raising your rent $20, because we all know that taxes went up in the municipality last year, and we all know that fuel costs went up, and we all know that hydro costs went up, and we all know that general maintenance went up and therefore $20 is fair," that it is extremely difficult for any tenant, given that he doesn't have access to the books of the landlord, to make a judgement.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): Oh, get off it.

Mr. Deans: And what we have happening in the Province of Ontario—I hear the voices from the wilderness—

Mr. Cassidy: The Neanderthals are out again.

Mr. Deans: Well, let me just digress for a moment. I think it would be in the best interests of the government backbenchers to have the cabinet ministers explain to them that the longer they yatter in the background, the longer I am going to talk.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Yes, we know that.

Mr. Deans: That's a simple fact of the way this place operates. The longer you yipper and yapper around in the back, the longer I am going to talk to you about it.

Mr. Taylor: You never say anything worthwhile.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): The rump is up tonight.

Mr. Deans: Rumps usually are noisy.

Mr. Taylor: You won't roast this rump.

Mr. Deans: That may be true, but then again there's not much meat on it—most of it's fat. I think what we are really saying is that, in terms of rental increases, since the tenant doesn't have access to the information that is available or should be available, it is impossible for him to make the kind of judgement. The minister can make this as a part of the whole bureau structure that was set up in 1968 or 1969. I'm not sure whether I am still a member or not, because there hasn't been a meeting for so long, but I was a member of the Hamilton landlord-tenant advisory bureau and I can tell you frankly that a more useless organization has rarely ever existed.

Mr. J. P. MacBeth (York West): With you on it I am not surprised.

Mr. Deans: It is interesting to note that in spite of my best efforts, which are obvious to everyone in the House, I have been unable to move that landlord-tenant advisory bureau to do anything other than give simple advice, and generally the advice is, "You'd better see a lawyer because you are going to require one."

I think that this is really what the problem has been. I think you could quickly change the advisory bureau and give it a little more muscle, give it the power to investigate, to order certain functions to be performed. You could make it necessary within the terms of the lease to justify—either at the end of every lease or at the re-signing of every lease—in a statistical way the increases that are being demanded. You could set up a standard lease form that everyone would know is available and is used throughout the Province of Ontario.

You could take a look at rent control in a specific area—for example the area of Ottawa, which came to the private bills committee back in 1968 or 1969 and asked for permission to set up a rental control agency in order that it could deal with unscrupulous landlords in that municipality—and they are not alone. There have been others—and that was denied by this government. It was denied by this government in spite of the fact that the local municipality felt in its wisdom that it was necessary. It was denied by the government, and don't for one minute think that that committee wasn't directed by this government.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right—by the member for Carleton East (Mr. Lawrence).

Mr. Deans: You may sit there, Mr. Minister, and try to convince me otherwise, but I sat on that committee at the time and I can well remember the debate. When a municipi-pality comes and asks for that kind of legislation because there is not an adequate supply of housing, and because the people in the municipality, by their own admission, were being mistreated and taken advantage of by unscrupulous landlords, and the municipal officials felt that it was necessary for them to have this kind of power in order to come to grips with it on a short-term basis, and this government refused to grant that power—and in addition to that, refused to build the necessary numbers of units to relieve the housing shortage—then there is something drastically wrong with the thinking of this government in relation to the power of the landlord and his right to make money over and against the requirements and needs of the average citizen in this province to have decent accommodation.

Now don't forget that when we are talking about landlords in many municipalities we are not talking about some Canadian who is sitting in Canada and doing his bit for the country. We are talking, in many instances, about German money being brought into this country and used for development and speculative purposes. And this, in fact, means that you are working hand in hand to ensure that Canadians who are working every day, earning pitiful wages, are having to pay exorbitant rents, much of which is being taken out of the country to a foreign power. That is one of the basic problems in this province that hasn't been dealt with.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What is the Minister of Justice doing about it?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Just one brief question, if I could, of the minister, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister, I understand you told my colleague from Lakeshore that you took one brief trip in December in a government plane. Would you mind telling us where you went?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I believe it was Thunder Bay. I'm not sure, but I believe it was Thunder Bay.

Mr. Shulman: Was that on government business?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment proposed by Mr. Lewis. Sorry—the hon. member for Brant (Mr. R. F. Nixon).

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: This reminds me of last weekend. It's nothing but enthusiastic support. You are not really winding up the debate on the amendment that's before us, Mr. Chairman, but since you are starting to fool around with your gavel I thought perhaps I had better say something before the amendment was put.

Mr. Chairman: You want this on the record, do you?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It's very appropriate under these circumstances that the amendment is before the House to reduce the expenditure for this particular policy ministry to $1, because there is every indication from the discussion here this evening and also on Friday that we could very well do without the expenditure under this minister's direction, and the government and the province would not suffer.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that a very wide range of debate has been permitted by yourself and your colleagues who have been occupying the chair this evening on almost any subject that might possibly be even remotely associated with Justice policy. As a matter of fact, I thought that perhaps we would be discussing farm prices, because if there is any injustice in the province, it has to do with farmers. We haven't got around to that yet; perhaps we should.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is evident that the concept of this particular superministry—so called—has been a failure. I think it has been a serious mistake on the part of the Premier to downgrade this particular minister as well, who had served so well in other capacities, by putting him into what has amounted to almost a senate appointment, where he has little or nothing to do but sit among his ministers and probably talk about what is in the daily papers and how exciting the question period is these days.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there are matters of grave and growing concern, such as the government policy with regard to the control of organized crime, which was put to the minister tonight. His answer amounted to nothing, as far as I was concerned. Surely this is the time when he should be prepared, if he can't give a ringing statement to the House—pounding the desk as he used to in the days when he was controlling pollution—that at least, if he couldn't do that, he could give us a very well documented point-by-point dissertation on what this government, led by himself in the policy field, is doing to control the menace of organized crime in this province.

All he did was indicate that he and his ministers were looking for charges and convictions and that they were not interested in a public examination of what the problem is. In that way, he criticized what is being done in the Province of Quebec. I would hope, frankly, that this ministry has somebody sitting in on those hearings for every moment of them, because the information that is revealed there seems to have a considerable impact in the affairs of this province as well.

Mr. Chairman, the hour is growing toward adjournment, but we for our party will certainly support the amendment that is before you, sir, that will reduce the expenditure for this particular ministry to $1. We even think that would be wasted.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: There are two or three other matters which I would like to have the opportunity of raising with the Provincial Secretary for Justice. If it is in order, I would ask that perhaps the House leader would move the committee rise and report.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I suggest we carry on for another half hour, so we can deal with those points.

Mr. Renwick: No.

Mr. Cassidy: No.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Members are eating into other ministries. Time is wasting.

Mr. Stokes: It is our time.

Mr. Deans: We consider the minister's job more important than he does.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Members opposite wasted about half an hour of it in irrelevancies.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the Chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs leave to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, before I move the adjournment of the House, I would like to say the House will continue with the discussion in supply tomorrow.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): What about the budget?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I am sorry. We will continue after we have the speaker for the NDP in reply to the budget. There will probably be the same procedure on Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We have visitors with us this afternoon: in the west gallery, students from the Waterdown High School in Waterdown. This evening in the west gallery we will have further groups of Boy Scouts from St. Clement's in Toronto, the Toronto Boy Scouts Troop No. 188, and the Scarborough Student Council members.

We also have some special guests in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon. They are six exchange students from India and one from Mexico, who are sponsored by the Rotary Clubs of Lindsay and of Fenelon Falls. We welcome these gentlemen with us this afternoon.

ESTIMATES

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, I have here a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By his own hand, W. R. Macdonald, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1974, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, April 17, 1973.

WCB OFFICIAL

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. On Friday the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) said—and I am using the Hansard not yet printed:

Mr. Speaker, on the evening of April 3 the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, who unfortunately is not in his seat this morning, in reply to the Speech from the Throne made several remarks about Mr. A. C. MacDonald, executive manager of Workmen's Compensation Board. The tone and context of the remarks have left the impression in Hansard that Mr. MacDonald accepted a bribe.

Mr. Singer: How does Hansard express a tone?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: As the House knows, Mr. Speaker, such action on Mr. MacDonald's part would constitute grounds for a criminal prosecution. The hon. member said and I quote: "He has a $75,000 yacht, he has two lovely homes, he winters in Switzerland, yet he is the man who, on a $30,000 salary, engineered the Fidinam deal."

Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the House that Mr. MacDonald does not own a boat, he has one home, and he has never been to Switzerland or Europe for that matter.

An hon. member: Wrong again!

Mr. Yakabuski: Par for the course with Eddie.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. MacDonald has been with the Workmen's Compensation Board since 1946, and in those 27 years he has been steadily promoted to his present position as executive manager, which is the equivalent of a deputy minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the member coming to his point of privilege?

Mr. Sargent: This is part of the point. Hang on to your seat. It goes on:

I very greatly regret that the hon. member should make such an attack on Mr. MacDonald, and I feel that the member's actions were cruel and cowardly. The member is well aware that Mr. MacDonald cannot rebut the member's remarks either in the House or in a court of law. I do not expect the member to apologize to the House, neither do I presume that he would have the courage of his convictions to repeat his remarks outside the House.

Mr. Speaker, in the issue of the Compensator, a publication of the Workmen's Compensation Board, of June 11, 1971, on page 7, after a very lengthy, glowing report of the great qualities of Mr. MacDonald, it goes on to say:

The gardens of his Willowdale home find themselves a trifle neglected during the warmer months, for on every available weekend Alan MacDonald heads for Lake Simcoe's Cook Bay and the fully equipped, six-berth, Alcan 370 house cruiser, which is based at Keswick. Its twin OMC 155 engines will propel it at 30 miles per hour.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will you get to your point of privilege?

Mr. Sargent: I am getting to the point.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He is saying the minister is wrong.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): He is saying the minister is absolutely wrong.

Mr. Sargent: The article says:

Its twin OMC 155 engines will propel it at 30 miles per hour, space permitting. Last year MacDonald brought his craft through the Trent canal system's 41 locks to Toronto in one weekend. He claims the 300-mile odyssey wore out two crews.

Going back further into the article, it says:

MacDonald's role is that of a company executive—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): They don't like the truth over there, eh?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can see nowhere where the member's privileges in this House have been abused. There is no point of privilege at this point in time.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Well, what is your point of privilege?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have high regard for the minister personally, but when he accuses me of being cowardly and cruel, I think that is a point where he might apologize. In fact, I point out that he is completely wrong in what he said. If the minister doesn't regard that as a yacht, the people of Ontario do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That has nothing to do with the member's point of privilege.

Mr. Sargent: I think he should apologize for what he has said so far.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is no point of personal privilege that has been abused.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me to speak to a point of order, surely, sir, it is your responsibility, when an exchange of this nature takes place in the House, to see that the facts as they are on the record are put forward from any source.

The hon. member, my colleague, has made certain charges which were replied to by the Minister of Labour, under whose responsibility the gentleman under discussion works. He made certain charges against my colleague which were very far-reaching indeed. As a matter of fact, you could call them insulting, but the hon. member, my colleague, is simply calling to your attention, sir, the fact that what he said was at least in large measure completely factual.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, the hon. minister.

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to point out that the explanation given by the hon. member opposite mentions a boat in 1971. We are now in 1973.

Mr. Sargent: That is when the Fidinam deal was made.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Has he got a new boat?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No. It is not so much the fact of the boat but the inference that one senior employee at the Workmen's Compensation Board would have done things which are not proper or which would show some misconduct. That is what I didn't like. I can tell the members in this House that I have been tough, I have been hard on the board.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Not tough enough.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I feel it is my responsibility to support people who have served this province for 27 years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a debate.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: On what?

Mr. Sargent: I would ask the Chair to let me have two more lines to prove what I am saying here today.

Mr. Speaker: You have shown no point of personal privilege which has been curtailed or abused in any respect.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Before you make your ruling, if I may, we have before us the situation where a minister of the Crown calls a member of this Legislature cowardly as a result of three accusations. You now have the member, in response to that, reading from a periodical published by the board, saying that two years ago the man had a yacht. The response to that by the minister is that he doesn't have a yacht now. Does that justify the allegation of cowardliness?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have heard many charges thrown back and forth across this House, none of which can be substantiated and many of which should not have been said.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. member: Sit down.

Mr. Sargent: Just try and make me sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Many of the things should not be said which are said in this House, in my opinion.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister is a fair man, will he apologize for saying "cowardly," because I don't think I am really.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Oh, yes the member is. Say it outside.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, I didn't say the member was cowardly. I said his remarks were cruel and cowardly.

Mr. Sargent: Even though the minister was wrong!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Now, I would like to point out that in his statement he also said—

Mr. Sargent: The minister knows he is wrong!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: In his statement the member said that he had a yacht of $75,000, two lovely homes, and he wintered in Switzerland—yet he is the man who, on a $30,000 salary, engineered the Fidinam deal.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, he has proved the minister wrong.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister want me to develop these points? Does he want me to prove it to him?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is getting into a debate, and the Speaker cannot rule on the accuracy of these remarks.

Statements by the ministry.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): That was probably the first legitimate point of privilege.

TASK FORCE HYDRO

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, the first two reports of Task Force Hydro have been released. The first dealt with Hydro in Ontario, "A Future Role and Place". The second was "An Approach to Organization".

Today I would like to present to the House the third report, dealing with "Nuclear Power in Ontario". This report was prepared by a five-man team of consultants in collaboration with a broad cross-section of Hydro executives and the Advisory Committee on Energy.

My purpose in presenting the report is to inform all the members of this House of the results of their study.

This report reviews and evaluates Ontario Hydro's decision in the late 1950s to proceed with the Canadian heavy water series of reactors known as CANDU.

What action will be taken by the government will be determined only after careful consideration has been made of the recommendations, and I can assure the hon. members that they will be given our immediate attention.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development:

Has he cleared up the confusion that was evident in his statement in the House on April 10 pertaining to the availability of troops to assist in sandbagging certain areas of the Great Lakes where the danger from flooding has been bad and may get worse? Is he aware that, according to statements made recently, the troops are definitely available on the call of this ministry and that it would not be totally at the cost of the ministry, according to the information that is now publicly available?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's any confusion except in the minds of some of the media, particularly in the Windsor area. As recently as last night, I have had discussions with the hon. Jack Davis; and certainly he is not confused. The troops have been available from the very beginning—no one has ever quarrelled with the fact that they were available—and they include engineers, of course, ordinary members of the services.

However, from the very beginning it's been quite clear that the formula available to the Province of Ontario was one that placed virtually the total burden of cost on this province on the basis of factors and formulae, which I've made available to anyone who'd like to see copies. In addition, the question of cost was one which neither the federal government nor our own people had the experience or the knowledge to equate. In other words, it was totally open-ended and could run into millions for services that we couldn't assess.

I may say that it had been hoped that the federal government, at today's cabinet meeting, would come forward with a more useful, more reasonable proposal. If not, I understand they're meeting on Thursday, and again we may hope for some proposals. But the question is not one of availability; the question is one of a total blank cheque as to the costs to this province for calling in the troops themselves.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Would the minister not agree that his comments were misleading when he said the total costs of the use of the troops would have to be carried by the province, when it is generally understood that only special costs would be the responsibility of the provincial Treasury—that is, the cost of the sandbags, the cost of transporting the troops involved—and that the salaries and the other costs associated with the troops would, as usual, be carried by the government of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: That is simply not so, Mr. Speaker. If the Leader of the Opposition would look at the schedule—and I can get a copy for him—as a matter of interpretation, we come under what can be seen as the second column, and in that case, the province would pay everything, 100 per cent. It is debatable whether we might or might not come under column 1; in that case there would be only minor disbursements picked up by the federal government, with us paying the cost of rations, food, laundry, wear and tear, transportation, salaries, out-of-pocket expenses, and housing. I may say, Mr. Speaker, one of the most intriguing things is that there is a 10 per cent gratuity which we pay on top of all those expenses.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Incredible!

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): By the opposition's wonderful federal friends! Don't apologize for them.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: So that there will be no more confusion about this—there is no confusion in the mind of the hon. Jack Davis—I hope, as I mentioned earlier, that either today or on Thursday, we will be presented with some formula that is rational and acceptable to us.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Is the minister prepared, if the menace of the high waters on the Great Lakes system and elsewhere continues and grows, to get the assistance of these men on the scene without worrying about the cost of laundry and gratuities? Would the minister not agree that it is time it is worked out, whoever is to blame, so that we can get the services of these people, as we obviously need them?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, of course, if the question of danger to life and limb were to arise, it would be the immediate responsibility of me and this government to call in the troops. As members know, the troops in London are only a few hours or an hour away and the troops in Petawawa, I am told, can be at the scene in under 24 hours. Absolutely, if there is danger to life and limb, they will be called upon without regard to cost.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that the borough of Etobicoke is supplying sandbags and, to some great extent, crews to put them in place, on its own initiative and apparently without any assistance from the minister?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I am quite aware, Mr. Speaker, that in dozens or scores of places along the shores of the Great Lakes, municipalities, groups, individuals, and volunteer parties are doing exactly what the member has described.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the minister's position in regard to this matter not similar to that of a mayor of a town saying, when the fire department was at a fire, "We can't allow you to go ahead and put out the fire until we know how much water you are going to use"?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No. I think that's a ridiculous comparison, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the minister if it is not true that the federal government is the one that is holding up the proposal of the province at this time, and that's why we don't have the troops?

Mr. Roy: What does it have to do with that?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We will remember the member's place in history.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): The minister keeps on making excuses rather than getting some work done.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, may I say that in my dealings over the last number of hours, days and weeks with the hon. Jack Davis, he has been nothing other than open, straightforward, supportive and understanding of our problem.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: More than the minister remembers it.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: He is the person who has to carry this particular problem insofar as the federal government is concerned. He is the person who has developed what is in my opinion—and I am sure will be in the opinion of this House—a workable, sensible formula for the use of the troops. He is the person who assures me that this week, that proposal will be available to the Ontario government. Therefore, I don't want to jeopardize, in any way, the straightforward and working relationship—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Stop right there.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence:—between the people of this province who, as taxpayers, will benefit from the proposed scheme, and the federal government.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): That wasn't the right question.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary. The member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Should it be clarified to the satisfaction of the minister and of the cabinet that all normal costs of the Canadian Armed Forces will be borne by the federal government, will the minister in his wisdom request these troops to come in and co-ordinate a proper approach to sand-bagging and other remedial works in these low-lying areas in the province, such as the township of Malden and the Lake St. Clair area?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): The federal government has been sand-bagging us for years.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I can't speak at this moment on behalf of all my colleagues in the government, but depending on how you interpret the word "normal," my answer would be yes. If all normal costs, in our opinion—if the overhead, rations, food, and all this kind of thing—were things that were to be borne by the federal government, I am sure we would have called them in weeks ago.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

NORTH PICKERING DEVELOPMENT

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A question of the hon. Minister of Revenue: Before he spends any money from the additional $100 million that is in the estimates for his department this year and which is designed for the purchase of land in the North Pickering project, will he recommend to his colleagues in cabinet that a full public hearing be held as to the usefulness of the decision made by the government to begin the expropriation and purchase of land in that particular area and for that particular purpose?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, Ontario Housing Corp. is merely being used as the vehicle for the handling of the transactions in a technical, legal sense. I would refer the hon. Leader of the Opposition to my colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett), who at this moment is in charge of the arrangements for the North Pickering project.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Would the minister explain why it is in his jurisdiction that we are going to be asked to debate this matter of an additional $100 million when we get to it in the estimates debate? What does he intend to do—transfer the responsibility for that debate to his colleague as well?

Mr. Roy: Pass the buck.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did point out to the hon. member that there were technical reasons for doing this. It was a vehicle which was felt by all concerned to be the most expeditious one to handle this matter.

The hon. member is concerned about the ability to debate the matter because it will come up in my estimates. I can assure the hon. member that arrangements can be made, and I am sure the Premier (Mr. Davis) will agree with me, so that it is made possible for the members of the House to debate it, either in my estimates with my colleague present or in some other form.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to transfer the question, particularly in view of the fact that we have already had a resolution passed by the House permitting the appropriate minister, whoever it is, to go ahead and spend the money even before the debate comes forward. I would like to transfer the question and ask the hon. Minister of Industry and Tourism if it is his intention to have a full public hearing as to the usefulness of the North Pickering project before he gets his hands into that $100 million and starts buying the property in that area, where the prices have already been so seriously inflated by the way the matter has been handled up until this time.

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, at this very time we are in negotiations with the federal government relating to the hearings which it is intending to hold, even further to the one it had last spring. We are discussing it from the terms of reference that the federal government is placing before this government and we have come to no decision, because there has been no agreement on exactly what it will produce in the final analysis.

I say to the hon. Leader of the Opposition that we are not in a position to say at this time as to whether we will conduct a full public hearing on the situation or not, but we will inform the House as soon as we have entered into, or not entered into, an agreement with the federal government relating to the hearing it is going to hold.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Is it not true that the hearing the hon. minister is talking about has to do with the Pickering airport, which in many respects is an entirely different subject and where there certainly should be a full public hearing before too many dollars are spent, federal or provincial? Would not the minister at the same time agree that the same reasons that seem to be compelling the government of Canada to have a public hearing into this matter should apply with at least as much force to this minister's policy to proceed with North Pickering community?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, it has been the federal government's request of us that we should also conduct the hearing on the North Pickering community in conjunction with its hearing on the airport, and we have made no decision. At this time we have actually said we will not hold a public hearing, but we are reviewing the situation.

I also inform the House that as far as the spending of money for acquiring of land in the project has already commenced, as of last week we acquired—

Mr. Sargent: The government still doesn't know where it is going.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: That might be very true, but the member would lead the way, I suppose, if we were to call on him?

Sir, we have acquired 407 properties and we have expended a total of about $37½ million at this time in acquiring lands in North Pickering.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre, a supplementary.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, is the minister proposing to hold up expropriation until after his decision is made with regard to these hearings?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, we have not decided on exactly whether we will advance along the line of expropriation. When we do, it will be noted in the journal.

Mr. Deacon: He is not answering the question, Mr. Speaker. I am asking the minister if he has decided to hold up expropriation until the government has made a decision with regard to holding the hearings?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, at this point I would say that the two subjects are not related. We will make a decision on one not connected with the other.

Mr. Cassidy: What does the minister mean, they don't relate to that?

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Of course they are related.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West on a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis (Supplementary): I take it from the minister's reply that he is prepared to spend on behalf of the government all the money that has been appropriated for this purpose, independent of the federal government's decision on the airport, whether or not a public hearing is held in advance, and even though it violates all of the precepts of the Toronto-centred region plan as they were set down?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I think I've clearly indicated to this House on more than one occasion that the government has indicated clearly that the relationship of North Pickering to the airport is not there; that if the federal government should decide not to advance its project of development of an airport, we are not in the position—nor do we wish to indicate at this time that we are going to be—to terminate North Pickering community. Further to that, we do not accept the remarks by the leader of the NDP that it is not in keeping with the Toronto-centred region plan.

Mr. Lewis (Supplementary, Mr. Speaker): Is the minister not aware that when the Toronto-centred region plan was introduced it envisaged a community of between 20,000 and 50,000 people in the Cedarwood area, which the government has now inflated to a quarter of a million on perhaps the unjust premise of an airport being built? How can the minister spend over $100 million of public funds with that kind of misconception from the beginning?

An hon. member: The member should get his facts straight before he asks questions.

Mr. MacDonald: Look who's talking.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the question as asked by the leader of the NDP is repetitious, because I have answered the same question to him in previous statements in this House—that the North Pickering community is the amalgamation of two communities that were in the Toronto-centred region plan.

If one goes back and reviews the Toronto-centred region plan he will find that the population of the two communities that are joining had roughly about 300,000 people. In the North Pickering community we are estimating the population in the future will reach about 200,000. We believe it is in keeping with the Toronto-centred region plan and we are advancing the project.

Mr. Renwick: Come on, don't misread that report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East with the last supplementary.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister is aware of what the purpose of a hearing is? Is he not precluding anything that might go in a hearing if he is going ahead to expropriate in the first place? Why is he having a hearing?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: No, I think the member is wrong, because I have not indicated that we are having a hearing. I have indicated exactly the opposite.

Mr. Roy: He is contemplating one.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He might.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions? The leader of the New Democratic Party?

SALES TAX ON ENERGY

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Would he not agree when one puts a tax on the energy resources of the province, that energy, like bread or milk, is a commodity that has regressive incidence characteristics? In other words, a price increase on energy affects the little guy on an income scale almost as much as the higher-income earner because they likely consume comparable amounts of energy.

Would he not agree, therefore, that it is regressive?

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Man cannot live by bread alone.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, although it is not directly in my field, I think that we can go back to the philosophy of the White select committee on taxation. The fundamental touchstone of that philosophy was that the regressivity of a sales tax or an energy tax can be overcome by the application of a tax credit system.

Mr. Cassidy: Not for 50 cents a week it can't.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I believe that the Treasurer's (Mr. White) budget is consistent with the fundamental philosophy of that particular committee.

Mr. Cassidy: For 50 cents a week? That's nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, in view of the Treasurer's remarks about lowering the thermostat and putting on sweaters and things of that kind, would the minister agree that price increases are an inequitable means of bringing about energy conservation? He certainly agrees with that?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: If they were isolated and done on their own I would have to agree.

Mr. Lewis: Right. Then he would also agree that all I have put to him is a direct quote from a speech by the parliamentary assistant (Mr. McKeough) to the Premier in March of this year, whose words are clearly in conflict with the decision made by the provincial Treasurer—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Lewis: —and how is it that none of these energy views was resolved in cabinet before the provincial Treasurer brought down his sales tax increase on energy?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The cabinet didn't get consulted on that.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I can't comment on that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West has further questions?

GAS RATE HEARINGS

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a further question of this minister. Is the minister's department intending to make an intervention before the Ontario Energy Board related to the rate application hearings for Consumers' Gas?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: The matter of an intervention before that board would not be strictly within my jurisdiction.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): What does the minister do over there?

Mr. Cassidy: What does he do except fly to Cuba?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I expect that that should be best posed to the Attorney General.

Mr. Lewis: I will be glad to redirect that, Mr. Speaker, if I could, to the Attorney General. Is it the intention of the government of the Province of Ontario to intervene before the Ontario Energy Board on the rate base application for Consumers' Gas?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): The matter is being studied now. I would anticipate that an early statement would be made. I expect the government will have counsel, but the statement will be officially made.

Mr. Lewis: Would not the minister think it incongruous that the people of Ontario have to pay $28 a year more per family for energy; that then there'll be a two-price system in Alberta; and that now Consumers' Gas wants to raise its rates? Does he not think the government might take the consumers' interest to heart at some point in time?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Very much so, but this matter is going to be dealt with before the board.

Mr. Lewis: But the minister is not willing to give a guarantee of intervention?

Hon. Mr. Bales: That matter is being studied carefully at the moment. When the whole matter is resolved, as to the intervention and so on, a statement will be made.

EFFECT OF ENERGY TAX ON EDUCATIONAL COSTS

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education, which many of my colleagues have wished to ask, and I'd like to open it up. Has the minister calculated into the overall educational costs the increase that will fall on school boards, given the seven per cent energy tax?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): The answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, is no, it was not calculated into the original determinations of the ceilings. At this point in time, I don't know what it will actually amount to.

Mr. Reid: Tell them all to bring sweaters to school.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I have asked for the figure and it will be available tomorrow, I'm told.

Mr. J. Duksza (Parkdale): Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Duksza: Does the minister realize that the imposition of this tax will cost the Metro school board alone $750,000?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, I don't realize that, Mr. Speaker, because I haven't got the figures, maybe the hon. member has been able to figure this out, but I haven't had the figures presented to me.

Mr. Duksza: I have a supplementary. Will the minister ensure that this additional cost to the school boards will not mean further cutbacks of essential services?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as I've said here many times, cutbacks are really not being imposed in educational services. I will certainly study the impact of the seven per cent tax on school board budgets.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside, a supplementary?

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary.

Mr. Duksza: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, while I am on the subject. In view of the fact that the minister is supposed to have made a decision by last Friday whether or not to allow the school boards to phase in the cuts until June, 1974, has he made a decision on this? The school boards have requested the minister to allow them to phase in the cuts until June, 1974, and he was supposed to give an answer to that last Friday. Would he be able to tell the House whether he has given the answer or whether he is prepared to give an answer to that?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, Mr. Speaker, I haven't replied to the Metropolitan Toronto Board of Education in answer to their letter and the delegation that met me. I expect to answer them tomorrow or first thing Thursday.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. In view of the fact that this seven per cent energy tax—I'm waiting until the minister is listening.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): The member might wait a long time there. He'd better ask it.

Mr. Burr: In view of the fact the seven per cent energy tax will cost the Windsor school board approximately $50,000 a year, which is the equivalent of five $10,000-a-year teachers and this will be the same result all over the province, would the minister consider asking the Treasurer to exempt school boards from the energy tax to avoid having to pass the money out with one hand and take it back with another?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I asked for a study to be made of the actual impact of this tax on the school boards. These figures will be available tomorrow. When I've got the figures, if I think it is appropriate and necessary, I will certainly make representations to my friend—

Mr. Reid: Does the minister mean he has no idea?

Mr. Speaker: Any further supplementaries?

Hon. Mr. Wells:—and see if there need to be some special considerations for school boards. But let's wait until we get the figures and the facts. We're not going to operate—

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary, which I had not intended to ask but I'm provoked to: Does the minister not think that it's a pretty typical example of Tory planning that having given ceilings across the province, he imposes a seven per cent energy tax which will affect the expenditures of all school boards everywhere, and he doesn't calculate the impact in advance? Doesn't the minister think that's nonsensical? And the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter) with his ceilings—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Roy: What kind of planning is that?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

FUNDS FOR PURCHASE OF NIAGARA ESCARPMENT

Mr. Lewis: No, I have one new question which I want to ask. Can the Minister of Government Services tell me, now that the estimates are out, how much money he's put aside for purchase of lands on the Niagara Escarpment?

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Mr. Speaker, the money for the purchase of lands on the Niagara Escarpment will not be within my estimates.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question then of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Can he tell me what moneys have been put aside in his estimates for the purchase of lands on the Niagara Escarpment?

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, there is no specific setting aside of funds for lands on the Niagara Escarpment.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): There had better not be.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development what amounts of money have been put aside for the purchase of the Niagara Escarpment by any of his ministers in this field?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I think, Mr. Speaker, that moneys specifically allocated to the Niagara Escarpment will be found in the Treasurer's estimates.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Well, what is that amount?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I don't know.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: Does the minister mean that he received the report on the Niagara Escarpment and he doesn't know how much money we're spending?

Mr. Cassidy: He doesn't have very much of anything.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, can I ask the Chairman of the Management Board, which makes the economic decisions, how much money we have set aside for the acquisition of land on the Niagara Escarpment?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I'll say this, Mr. Speaker, it will be known in a very short time when the money is allocated—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on!

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Grey-Bruce have a supplementary?

Mr. Sargent: If the minister can answer, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT COMMISSION

Mr. Sargent: I asked the minister a month ago when that commission was going to be named for the Niagara Escarpment. Does anybody know what's going on about that?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Well, we all know and it's a matter of government policy. When we're ready to bring it to the House, then the answer will be given.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary then: Is the minister going to give representation to the Bruce connection on that?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I'll certainly be very closely in touch with those people; yes.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for York West have further questions?

Mr. Lewis: Scarborough West. I don't have—

Mr. Speaker: I meant Scarborough West, I'm sorry.

The Minister of the Environment has the answer to a question from the previous day.

POLLUTION PROBLEM AT CANADIAN GYPSUM

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, a supplementary question was asked me about the Canadian Gypsum Co. by the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) as to whether I was aware of complaints of emissions of odours from the Oak St. plant.

On checking, I find that we have had no complaints about odour emissions, but we have had some complaints about noise having to do with some of the new equipment that has been put in to deal with some of the pollution problem. And again speculating, it could well be because some of the equipment was put into operation only about 10 days ago, and there may have been a short breakdown or something or other there. But, if the hon. member can give me details, I will pursue it further.

Mr. Speaker: We also have an answer from the Minister of Community and Social Services.

USE OF INDIAN PROGRAMME FUNDS FOR WOUNDED KNEE EXPEDITION

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question with reference to whether any assistance had been given to a trip to Wounded Knee.

I am informed that in March, 1973, the director and three field workers of a youth project decided to travel to Pine Ridge, SD, as observers at a cost of approximately $500. The personnel mentioned did not proceed to Wounded Knee, but remained at Pine Ridge for two days, then returned to Canada.

The Indian organization which originally hired these staff members for another purpose has recently issued a formal statement that permission was not given to the four youth workers to travel to South Dakota and has, in fact, refused to accept the cost of the trip. The four individuals had been requested to reimburse the Indian organization for that amount. I also understand that the contract for the staff members has since been terminated.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

URANIUM RESOURCES

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

In view of the fact that nuclear energy is going to be one of the few areas that Ontario has any jurisdiction over as far as future energy needs go, and in view of the No. 3.7 recommendation in report No. 3 on nuclear power in Ontario, has the government or the minister's policy field carried forward any negotiations with the uranium producers in the Province of Ontario as to guaranteeing sources of uranium for nuclear reactors? Secondly, does the Province of Ontario intend to become a stockholder or owner to guarantee these resources?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there have been no negotiations involving the government. All I can say is that from the policy field's point of view it has been before us a number of times; the whole issue of uranium—its availability and, as important, the jurisdiction over uranium as between the federal government and ourselves.

I would not be surprised but that today it may well be a matter of discussion between the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) and his opposite number in Ottawa, who at the moment, with the other ministers from across Canada, are involved in an effort to develop a mineral policy for Canada.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): We own our own resources. What do we want to go to Ottawa for?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: But I can't respond to the question as to whether or not any thoughts have been given to either negotiations. Certainly no discussion has occurred in the policy field with regard to such a specific thing as purchase of stocks, shares or the assets.

Mr. Reid: A supplementary: Would the minister not agree that because of the strategic nature of this particular resource, it's absolutely essential that we arrive at a policy immediately before we lose this particular resource that we have to depend on?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of a supplementary, could the minister advise this House when the government will be appointing a portfolio of energy resources so that we could direct our questions to the parliamentary assistant to the Premier, rather than hearing him involved in public debate outside the House?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, as I suggested a couple of weeks ago, the particular report which relates to the means by which energy will be handled from a governmental point of view in this province has been made by the parliamentary assistant to the Premier. My own guess is that in a matter of days or weeks the government will be bringing forward that report; it's not far off in being presented.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—actually it pertains to the question—would you take under advisement the possibility of having the parliamentary assistants being given the right to answer questions in the House? This would allow the parliamentary assistant for energy to take part in the question period, which would obviously be desirable, and it would also affect certain other parliamentary assistants.

Mr. Lewis: Careful. Careful.

Mr. Speaker: I think that's a matter that should be resolved fairly soon.

Mr. Lewis: That will be all right for the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), but what about the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith)?

Mr. Reid: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask if you think it is right and proper that the parliamentary assistant can report to the press and answer questions of the media in the Province of Ontario where we cannot elicit that information in the Legislature itself?

Mr. Speaker: Well, I think any hon. member is free to answer any question outside the House he sees fit to answer. To answer the previous question, though, it's in our rules and order that any minister—

Mr. Deacon: But my friend is talking about policy, government policy.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, can any hon. member answer—

Mr. Speaker: No, no. I didn't. That's what I said earlier. Any minister may refer a question, as our orders say, to a member of a board or commission.

Mr. Sargent: Especially if he doesn't know.

Mr. Speaker: But it hasn't been resolved yet that a question may be directed to a parliamentary assistant. I think that should be taken under advisement right away.

Did the member for Ottawa East have a supplementary?

Mr. Roy: I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary. The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Did the Provincial Secretary protest to the Premier of the province when he took energy away and put it under the member for Chatham-Kent?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: Does he not agree that it fits in his policy field? Has energy become too important for him?

Mr. Sargent: Good point. Good point!

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East.

AIR POLLUTION AT HAPPY VALLEY

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Is it the department's intention, once the families in Happy Valley have been relocated, to remove the monitor situated in Happy Valley, as was reported in the press last week?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I really can't answer that question. I would think that we would continue to have it there, because of the prevailing wind. It is one of the ways we monitor the stack at Falconbridge.

I wonder if the member can tell me who had reported that we were proposing to do this?

Mr. Martel: Is the minister not aware that one of his staff indicated to the Sudbury Star last Thursday, as reported in the press, that the monitor would be removed once the citizens were relocated?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would doubt that, Mr. Speaker, but I will check into it and let the member know. As I say, it is in the location in which it will monitor the stack through the prevailing wind; or at least, it is in an area in which we get the wind direction quite constantly.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Laughren: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! A supplementary on this one?

Mr. Laughren: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: All right.

Mr. Laughren: Is there any truth to the rumour that the new Northern Ontario Place is going to be established in Happy Valley?

Mr. Speaker: I don't see that that's a supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am certainly sorry I missed that. I wonder if the member could repeat it.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, I'll gladly repeat it. I wonder if the—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Laughren: The minister asked that the question be repeated, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry?

Mr. Laughren: The minister asked that the question be repeated.

Mr. Speaker: I didn't really recognize it as a proper supplementary.

Mr. Laughren: Oh, it certainly was, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): It's fundamental to the fallout in the Sudbury basin.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

SALES TAX ON ENERGY

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whom to ask this of, but the chairman of the board of management, or something, might know. Is that his job?

An hon. member: Management Board.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sargent: Across Ontario, when people go to pay their hydro bills, the Hydro doesn't know how to handle it because, if they pay their bills on May 1, they are paying for past power.

Mr. Speaker: Have you a question?

Mr. Sargent: What is the government going to do about it? How is it going to straighten out Hydro across Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I think if the member watches what happens, he'll learn how we're going to do it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment! A supplementary.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has the first supplementary.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, I would ask him to repeat his answer. I didn't hear it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Will the Chairman of the Management Board give us that again?

Mr. Sargent: Will the minister repeat his answer?

Mr. Speaker: The answer was not heard.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, what was your comment?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the member did not hear your answer.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about millions of dollars in overpayment across Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sargent: What is the government going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: As the budget matters are implemented, they will be referred to the House.

Mr. Sargent: On May 1 we have to decide.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: What the minister needs is a shot of hydro.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Have no fear—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The member for Waterloo North has a supplementary.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The question is this—will people be paying the seven per cent tax on bills which are issued on the day this comes into effect—

An hon. member: July 1.

Mr. Good:—on July 1—therefore they would have to pay on energy used before July 1—or will the tax be calculated on energy used after July 1?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I am sure that this, too, will become apparent when the legislation is introduced in the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The minister certainly doesn't know, that is apparent.

Mr. Sargent: He doesn't know.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please!
The member for Cochrane South.

CONDITION OF TIMMINS HIGH SCHOOL

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. Has the minister had an opportunity to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. I cannot hear the question. The member for Cochrane South.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): We didn't hear any answer.

Mr. Sargent: Why don't they all resign?

Mr. Ferrier: Has the minister had an opportunity to study the numerous briefs and representations made to him about the replacement of the Timmins High School? Is he in a position to reconsider his decision to go ahead with renovations to that high school?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I have considered the representations made by the various people of Timmins, and I must say to my friend that my original answer to them still stands. I feel that the only thing that we can approve at this time is renovation of that school.

Mr. Roy: They should all run for reelection.

Mr. Sargent: The member is making them look foolish.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Given the fact that additions have been made to that school in 1958, 1962, 1967 and 1968, there is much of that school which certainly is not in the category of a school that should be replaced.

Mr. Ferrier: As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister does not think that he will spend as much or perhaps more money on a renovation process than he would if a new school were built? As a second supplementary, will the minister himself go and see the school to see how inadequate it is and how inadequate a renovation programme will be to upgrade it, if he wants to?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, there are many schools across Ontario that people would like to replace. There just isn't enough money to do all the replacing.

Mr. Roy: We'd like to replace the minister.

Mr. Ruston: We will.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We have indicated to many of these schools that they will have to get by with renovations. I don't believe the renovations will cost more than an actual replacement.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would like my hon. friends to tell me how he could justify to the ratepaying public of Timmins replacing facilities that have only been built in the 1960s. You can't replace them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The member for Welland South was on his feet.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sorry, a supplementary. This will be the last supplementary then. The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Haggerty: I have a question directed to the Provincial Secretary for National Development.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are hearing a supplementary.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a supplementary of the Minister of Education: In view of his comments about the cost of new construction, would he be prepared to bend the regulations in order to permit the renovation of Lisgar Collegiate, a historic high school in Ottawa, which is now coming before his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Wells: That certainly isn't a supplementary question to the Timmins one.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Welland South.

IJC MEETING ON LAKE LEVELS

Mr. Haggerty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question directed to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development about the proposed International Joint Commission meeting to be held in Toronto on May 3 to hear the proposals on reducing the lake levels on Lake Ontario and Lake Erie. Will representations be made from the legislative assembly here, by members from here, or will the staff from his ministry be present?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I expect, Mr. Speaker, that will depend on the judgement of the International Joint Commission and Mr. Robichaud. I know that when they were meeting here last month they invited me to attend and have staff present. If the member is requesting me to pass along such a request to Mr. Robichaud, I would be glad to do it.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary: I think that in the past it has been the practice of the International Joint Commission to send out notices to those parties that are concerned. I am thinking, in particular of those from the ridings that front the lakefronts.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor West.

AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Clement), Mr. Speaker. Since the vast majority of Canadian auto parts production and auto assembly occurs in Ontario, what representation is the minister making to the federal government to ensure that the safeguards in the auto pact not only are not removed but are, in fact, strengthened, so that the dollar value of production in Ontario, or in Canada, equals the dollar value of the sales?

Mr. S. B. Handleman (Carleton): Wrong minister.

Mr. Bounsall: Could I redirect that to the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, a week ago Monday, as I reported to this House last Tuesday, we had an opportunity as the ministers of industry for the 10 provinces of Canada, of discussing some of the policies and some of the problems that the federal government is encountering in trade negotiations, and the auto pact agreement was one. May I say to this House that we have been in touch with the people in Ottawa of recent hours to see exactly what was included in the negotiations that Mr. Gillespie, the minister for the federal government, conducted with Washington a month ago.

I am waiting to have a further report because I was not aware of the fact that there had been any representation by the federal government to the US government in Washington. I do assure this House that I have made it very clear to Mr. Gillespie that this government wants to be involved in the negotiations relating to the auto pact agreement with the American government. I can only say to members of this House that I have been assured by Mr. Gillespie that we will have an opportunity for an input. As to how effective that input will be, we will have to wait and see.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sarnia.

EFFECT OF ENERGY TAX ON HOSPITAL COSTS

Mr. Bullbrook: I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. Presuming that the budget was a statement of total government fiscal policy representing the attitude of all ministries and secretariats, could he advise whether hospitals are exempt from the imposition of the seven per cent tax on energy use? If they are not, could he tell me what calculations his ministry has made or OHIP has made as to the cost to local boards or OHIP in connection with the imposition of that tax on hospitals?

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I can't answer that question. I can only say that we have already started to assess the problem to see what it does mean to hospitals.

Mr. Reid: Did they not tell the minister?

Mr. Lewis: Amazing! Both Health and Education.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary, am I correct in understanding that the response from the minister and his colleague the Minister of Education, is that no calculation heretofore or before the budget was made in connection with the imposition of that tax on educational institutions and hospital facilities?

Mr. Paterson: And other government institutions.

Mr. Roy: What was the purpose of the minister's policy meeting?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I just have an answer, yes or no?

Hon. Mr. Potter: As I told the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, we are at the present time reviewing this to see what effect it has on the hospitals.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of one final supplementary, am I correct in assuming that no calculations were made by OHIP or the Ministry of Health as to the effect of that tax on hospitals in the Province of Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: I think that is enough. The member for Port Arthur.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: Let me have an answer.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. minister wish to answer?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of making a review of the institutions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: I take it then—it follows logically—that neither the Minister of Health nor the Minister of Education knew of the major tax changes in the budget? It was the Treasurer's budget.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur.

CONSTITUTION OF TRADE MISSIONS

Mr. Foulds: A question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism, Mr. Speaker: Why is it that in the latest, undated, press release that crossed my desk from his ministry about the Italian and German targets for an Ontario trade mission, in the list of mission members there is no representation from two of the most discriminated against segments of our society, i.e., northern Ontario and women?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I have not got the list of all the trade missions that have left this province in the last three or four months, but I do assure the members of this House that when we select members for trade missions, either for trade or for tourism, we select people from across the Province of Ontario. Northwestern and north-eastern Ontario have been represented in many of our trade and tourism missions, and if the member wishes to make a specific reference to it I will be glad to review the files and see exactly where the individuals come from.

An hon. member: What about women?

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

Mr. Foulds: On a point of order, the minister didn't answer the second part of my question.

Mr. Speaker: Is there a quick answer to the second part of the question?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I will also take that under review.

Mr. Speaker: All right. The oral question period has expired.

Petitions.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order or point of privilege—

Mr. Reid: The member should make up his mind.

Mr. Carruthers: I would like to refer to an article appearing in the Toronto Star today, reporting the speech by the hon. member for Kitchener, who states that chairmen of select committees get $1,000 extra, plus $60 a day. As chairman of a select committee I am not aware that we receive $1,000 additional.

Mr. Lewis: He will ask for it now.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. Paterson moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, a brief explanation: This bill exempts, with due caution, fire department vehicles, police vehicles and ambulances from having to observe speed limits, stop at red signal lights and observe the no parking, standing, or stopping restrictions that exist in the present Act.

Mr. Duksza: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I rise on the request of my constituents to deliver personally to the Minister of Education the 1,700-name petition expressing the concern of my constituents about the effects on Parkdale Collegiate of the cutting of education grants.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but for future guidance, it should have been done under petitions.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, in responding to this budget, I want to begin with a few words about the provincial Treasurer (Mr. White); and I feel almost as though I'm punching a pillow, because he isn't here.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): The member has been punching pillows for years.

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): He'll be here; he'll be here!

Mr. MacDonald: However, I suspect he will read it in the record.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): He'll be here; perhaps we can save it.

Mr. MacDonald: The provincial Treasurer thinks of himself as being something of a swinging guy. Now I'd be the last to deny there's some validity in this contention; in fact, I don't think I ever smoked him out so readily in my experience.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Here he is.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I'm very glad to have him.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Start over again now.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Well!

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): We thought the Treasurer was in hiding.

Mr. MacDonald: Because he is something of a swinging guy, one is almost a little critical of him because that characteristic sets him apart from this cabinet in rather a pleasant way. When Bob Macaulay resigned from the government back in 1964, he was quoted as saying he couldn't stand the stuffed shirts in the government any longer. Well, the last thing one could accuse the provincial Treasurer of being is a stuffed shirt.

But by way of an appropriate comment, I'd like to borrow from a former colleague of mine, Walter Pitman, from his article that was carried in the Toronto Star last June 23. It reads as follows:

Every good hockey team has one—the big, tough, thick-skulled hard-checking, stick-swinging defenceman whose job it is to soften up the opposition and assure that his team doesn't get pushed around. He is essential, the John Ferguson type; the guy who will spend a lot of time in the penalty box, but will protect his less aggressive team mates and will slow down the competition.

Governments appear to need this kind of policeman too. The Ontario Tories have a lot of Lady Byng winners—Fern Guindon, Gordon Carton, James Auld—but the emerging tough is John White. Political etiquette frowns on physical violence, so the brickbats must be verbal. It takes a fast tongue, a raucous voice, a ready wit and a bright intellect to engage in the kind of confrontation which takes on the entire opposition and attempts to offset their criticism.

Hon. Mr. Welch: A fair assessment!

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it's a fairly apt comment. Since his days in the back benches the provincial Treasurer has always regarded himself as a self-appointed hatchetman for the government, and often he barged in with an impulsiveness that on occasion would have tempted one to believe that a more apt hockey analogy would be that of Eddie Shack. However, that would be unfair. That would be unfair, because Eddie Shack's contribution was invariably sheer brawn and little brains.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He scored some goals.

Mr. MacDonald: And the provincial Treasurer's contribution is—

An hon. member: Sheer brains!

Mr. MacDonald: —a tantalizing mixture of brawn and brains. I, for one, would never deny that he has an intellectual capacity that no other, bar none—this is a provocative statement—of his colleagues could match.

In fact, to the cabinet posts that he has acquired down through the last two or three years, he has brought not only that provocative capacity to throw in such comments as, "If you could only read," or, "If you would only listen," but he also brings erudition.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I regretted that, but my friend must admit that the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) is unusually provocative.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, well, I would have to agree with that.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): No more than the Treasurer.

Mr. MacDonald: But the point I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, is that he also brings erudition. Some time in the years past he was reading Bartlett's book of quotations, and he came across that quotation from Samuel Johnson, which he has paraphrased ad nauseam, even on the TV panel that I shared with him last Thursday night after the budget. It's something to the effect that I can't give you comprehension, but I'll give you an explanation; or I'll give you the facts—

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Understanding!

Mr. MacDonald: Or he can't give you understanding. As I say, he paraphrases it. He garbles it to his own purposes each time—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member means he doesn't get it right.

Mr. MacDonald: But he's bringing some degree of erudition. But sometimes—and this is the point I want to get to—the brain and the impulsiveness, this sheer imagination run riot, exceeds good common sense and careful assessment of the full consequences of his action. That was never more graphically illustrated than in the provincial Treasurer's first budget.

In fact, we have already had it documented; two of his colleagues, while he was out this afternoon, embarrassingly had to admit that they didn't know about the consequences of the tax increase, for example, on the full range of education and health institutions across this province. They are scrambling to figure out what it's all about; what the impact is going to be.

In this budget the provincial Treasurer's personal propensity for romanticism has reached new heights.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Lovable heights.

Mr. MacDonald: There will be no sales tax, says he, on pets or flowers, those lovable growing creatures; but he doesn't hesitate to slap a regressive tax on those other lovable creatures, the people of the Province of Ontario.

It is surely the epitome of Tory romanticism that pedigreed pets should be exempted from taxes which are applied to the poor people of Ontario. But while the provincial Treasurer's romanticism is mildly tolerable, his capacity for false image-making is really distorting the situation beyond tolerable limits.

For example, he speaks for a government which has preached, ad nauseam, fiscal restraint. That's the image. What's the reality? Well, Mr. Speaker, last year Ontario's gross revenues were $5,766,000,000. Next year's forecast is that they are going to be $6,867,000,000, an increase of over 19 per cent.

Now there's fiscal restraint! The Treasurer preaches it but he never practises it and that's been characteristic of the budget—his own and his predecessors'—down through the years.

Another example: He says he is going to be frugal this year, that he is going to cut $100 million to $200 million from our public debt. If we examine the budgetary figures, we find that last year the net public debt was $2,778,000,000 or $343 per capita; and this coming year the public debt is going to be, not less, but $2,991,000,000 or $371 per capita.

What, in effect, the provincial Treasurer has done is to point to the fact that there is going to be no increase to the public debt by external borrowing, in bonds and treasury bills, ignoring the fact that there is going to be internal borrowing to the extent of a cool $950 million, just short of $1 billion, from the Canada Pension Plan, from the teachers' superannuation fund, from the municipal employees' retirement fund and so on. We have the image of a provincial Treasurer who is going to be cutting the public debt, when in fact he is borrowing internally—that word he tends to hide, internally—he is borrowing close to $1 billion.

In short, Mr. Speaker, don't take the budget at face value. It requires a bit of analysis. And that's precisely what I would like to do this afternoon. I'd like to get down to some of that analysis without any further ado.

In the public mind, Mr. Speaker, the outstanding feature of the budget was the 40 per cent boost in sales from five to seven per cent and the imposition of a new seven per cent tax on energy. The government argues that these new taxes were necessary to increase grants to the municipalities and reduce property taxes; to enrich the tax credits and thereby relieve the burden on the lower-income groups.

Now, commendable as these objectives may be, the point I want to make and to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, is that new taxes were not necessary to achieve these budget objectives. During the next 12 months the provincial Treasurer is going to collect anywhere from about $364 million to over $500 million more revenue than he is now forecasting.

Once again this provincial Treasurer, as all his predecessors have done, has misrepresented the financial position to the people of the Province of Ontario.

The Liberal critic referred to this yesterday—it has been referred to down through the years. Quite frankly I think it's time this aspect of budgeting should be grappled with in a really serious manner. Therefore, we have attempted to do a careful analysis of it. I have here, for example, in tables which unfortunately are too large to be manageable and to put on to the record Mr. Speaker, an analysis of the budget for the last 10 years in the Province of Ontario. The fascinating thing about them is that there is an almost monotonous consistency about those budgets. It can be summed up by a few things that could be put in a tabular form.

For example, on retail sales tax, in nine of the last 10 years the government underestimated what it was going to get and its average error was 5.3 per cent. On gasoline tax, in eight of the 10 years they underestimated and their average error was 5.2 per cent. On corporation tax, in nine of the 10 years they underestimated the amount and average error was 11.5 per cent. On succession duties, in nine of the 10 years they underestimated the amount and the average was 7.4 per cent. On motor vehicle tax, they underestimated in eight of the 10 years and the average was 6.4 per cent. On the LCBO they can't even figure out, on the basis of all our experience, how much we are going to drink in this province—maybe there are some reasons for that. In 10 of the 10 years they underestimated and the average was 4.3 per cent.

On income tax—this was the one that came closest in terms of a balance—in six of the 10 years there were underestimates, in four there were overestimates, and the average error was 5.3 per cent.

Interestingly enough, when one goes back to the mines profit tax, which was for only the first four years of the 10, they underestimated in three of those four years and the margin of their error was 24.1 per cent. Even these Tories couldn't believe how little money they were going to get from this source.

Well, there's the record for the last 10 years—and I repeat, Mr. Speaker, it is 5.3 per cent on the average across the board.

Okay, let's take a look at last year, because I want to draw some conclusions from this and I don't want you to think I am being unfair in drawing these conclusions. The underestimation of taxation for the past year, according to the budget which the provincial Treasurer has now presented to us, was enormous. It was even worse than before.

In the 1972 budget, the Treasurer predicted tax revenues of $3,116,000,000. As it turned out, he raised $3,400,000,000 or 9.1 per cent more than he expected. That was taxation revenue. This is the largest-ever miscalculation of tax revenue. The yield on the retail sales tax was underestimated by 4.4 per cent. The personal income tax by 3.8 per cent. The motor vehicle tax by 20 per cent. The land transfer tax by 27 per cent. The estate tax by 31 per cent. The corporation tax by a whopping 48.6 per cent.

The more sophisticated this government becomes in its budget planning, the bigger the errors it makes. The average in terms of net revenues—and I am going to put it on net revenues so that it is comparable with the net revenue figures over the last 10 years that I have already cited—is that in the past year the Province of Ontario underestimated its net revenue by 7.8 per cent across the board.

Okay; what does that mean, Mr. Speaker? Let's translate that into dollars. We have a budget this year of $6,867,000,000. If we take the average for the last 10 years of an underestimate of 5.3 per cent, it means that next year the Treasurer can be almost dead certain—as certain as he can of anything in this world—that he is going to have at least $364 million more hidden revenue in his budget, and he knows it is there. It is a calculated misrepresentation. On the other hand if we take the seven—

Hon. Mr. White: I would make a point that it is not. It is the very best forecast we can make.

Mr. MacDonald: Just let me get to it. I am not going to get sidetracked by that for a moment.

If we take last year's error, which is 7.8 per cent, and if it were repeated this year and applied to that budget of $6,867,000,000, it would mean that by the end of next year he is going to have $535 million more revenue than he predicted. One can safely conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the greater revenue than is revealed in this budget, which the government will have to work with during the course of the year, will be somewhere between the figure of $364 million and $535 million.

In short, the Treasurer didn't need to put these new taxes on at all, from which he is going to raise a net levy of $333 million. The provincial Treasurer argues, as he attempted to do a moment ago by an interjection, that these are the best possible estimates. They are as good as Ottawa's said he.

Hon. Mr. White: Better!

Mr. MacDonald: They may be but it doesn't make it excusable, Mr. Speaker. Let me be fair, until now all governments have engaged in this game when budget-making—of under-estimating their revenues so that they have a cushion for supplementary expenditures during the course of the year; or so that they will have a better budgetary picture at the end of the year and they can present themselves as being great managers of the economy and the finances of the province.

There are some serious consequences flowing from this, Mr. Speaker, and I think they are too serious to tolerate playing games in this fashion in the future. It is bad enough to deceive the public with a calculated misrepresentation of the actual financial situation in the province and to use that as an excuse to fill a gap in revenues which won't exist. It is a mythical gap. That is bad enough; but the government in so doing is undermining its position, its own credibility, vis-à-vis the federal government.

The general complaint of Ontario with regard to Ottawa has been that Ottawa hasn't been doing enough to stimulate the economy. This Treasurer and his predecessor, Charles McNaughton, and his predecessor, the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) have been arguing consistently with the federal government that they have left too much of the slack to be picked up by the Province of Ontario; that Ontario had to engage too much in deficit; that there has been a fiscal mismatch; that instead of having the appropriate kind of economic thrust from Ottawa, Ontario has had to come in with the appropriate kind of thrust.

To a considerable degree I would agree with the minister. I think Ottawa is vulnerable on this point and therefore I would agree with the general proposition for which this minister and certainly his predecessors were pleading—that is, the establishment of a joint economic council through which the federal and the provincial governments would harmonize their fiscal policies. In fact, if that be the objective that the government was really interested in, I wonder why the provincial Treasurer has done what he has just now done.

For example, I have here quotes of his, given to that meeting of the ministers of finance on Jan. 18 and 19. Let me quote from page 22 of the official reproduction of his remarks; he is speaking to the federal finance minister.

The time has come for a bold fiscal initiative to stimulate the economy, to rectify the financial imbalance undermining our federal system. The major cut in federal income tax that I advocate is the key for meeting these multiple objectives.

A little bit earlier, on page 10 in the same document, he is quoted as saying—I hope the provincial Treasurer is listening; the words are coming back to haunt him:

It is our opinion at this time that tax increases by the provinces and the municipalities would both depress the economy and contribute to the resurgence of inflationary pressures.

The author is the Treasurer—not somebody else, the Treasurer.

So what he's doing is destroying his own credibility vis-à-vis the federal government. Admittedly, the federal government wasn't as bold as the provincial Treasurer wanted. It wasn't as bold as I would have wanted. I would agree with the provincial Treasurer that Ottawa's budget wasn't as expansionary as, in my view and perhaps in his view, the circumstances demanded. Admittedly, the federal government cut income tax only five per cent, rather than nine per cent, and didn't give as fair a share of the revenues to the provinces. We have a bad situation; certainly a situation that isn't as good as it might be. But is that justification, Mr. Speaker, for the province making a bad situation worse?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): White the knife, he'll be known as.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that justification for deliberately accentuating the fiscal mismatch?

Hon. Mr. White: On the contrary, we are running a larger cash deficit this year, as to the proportion of our revenues, than the federal government is.

Mr. MacDonald: Just let me get to that in a minute. The Treasurer is on the ball, but he is just about 30 seconds ahead. He anticipated me, and perhaps offence is the best form of defence. He is up to his old game. But he has destroyed his own credibility vis-à-vis the federal government.

What the Treasurer is now doing is saying to them: "You haven't had enough dynamic, expansionary thrust in your budget." And what does he do? He comes along and bolsters that inadequate expansionary thrust.

The fact of the matter is that, after pleading for that bold fiscal initiative, his government has brought in a contradictory budget. The Treasurer has a mythical $402 million deficit, but I've already pointed out in a pretty solidly documented fashion that he has hidden revenues that range anywhere from $364 million to some $530 million. So, by the end of the year, his deficit will be minuscule. It will be a balanced budget. He may even have a surplus; unless, of course, he gets engaged in massive supplementary expenditures which, I suppose, is also part of the game he may be intending to play. But he is not going to give that necessary thrust. He is making a mockery of the first objective of his own budget.

Has the provincial Treasurer forgotten what the first objective of his own budget was? I quote: "To ensure that the economy continues to move towards full employment."

The provincial Treasurer confirmed that any unemployment figure in excess of three per cent is unacceptable to this government. He reported that our unemployment had been 4.2 per cent in February. It was down to 4.1 per cent in April. Then he revealed that the average for the year is likely to be 4.4 per cent. Therefore, he was conceding that the averages in the later months of this year are going to crawl back up close to five per cent so that one can get that 4.4 per cent average.

Neither the Liberal government in Ottawa nor the Tory government here is doing enough to meet the job situation. The Treasurer has come in with a contractionary budget to make a bad situation worse, and each government is spending its time—this is the tragedy of it—blaming the other.

Mr. Speaker, I want to proceed from that to an analysis of the more regressive taxes that the government has brought in, to take a look at them in more detail. Mr. Speaker, in mediaeval France—I'm sure as a scholar of mediaeval days the minister will recall this.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): He is certainly mediaeval.

An hon. member: He's a Tory.

Mr. Lewis: In fact, he is primeval.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: The government of those days imposed a tax on salt, which was deemed in those days to be a big necessity for the well-being of the nation and its people. Down through the centuries the salt tax has always been cited as a classic in regressive taxes.

In 1964, it is interesting to recall, the Conservative government of Duff Roblin in Manitoba put a tax on heating fuel. So great was the public outcry and so certain did even the government become persuaded that they'd made a mistake, that a year later they repealed it. Now the provincial Treasurer apparently either didn't know about the Manitoba experience or he chose to ignore it.

Hon. Mr. White: What did they do about the tax on electricity?

Mr. MacDonald: Ontario's energy tax bids fair to becoming the salt tax of our history.

Hon. Mr. White: What's Mr. Schreyer done about the tax on cooking energy, heating energy, manufacturing energy? What's he done about lighting energy?

Mr. MacDonald: You know, I'm not so interested in isolated bits and pieces that the provincial Treasurer wants to pick out from what Mr. Schreyer does.

Hon. Mr. White: What is Premier Barrett doing?

Mr. MacDonald: What I am interested in is that Premier Schreyer brought in a budget that was so good that when the final vote came, both the Liberals and the Tories voted for it.

Hon. Mr. White: And the member knows why!

Mr. MacDonald: The minister's colleagues voted for the budget.

Hon. Mr. White: The member knows why—because they've got $42 million of our dough.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the minister trying to do? Pull the rug out from under his Manitoba Tory colleagues?

Hon. Mr. White: What is Premier Barrett going to do about his five per cent on heating, cooking?

Mr. Lewis: That's a social credit tax; don't be preposterous.

Hon. Mr. White: What's Premier Barrett going to do about that?

Mr. MacDonald: You know, there is little wonder that that long-time Tory, Fred Gardiner, expressed shock at the energy tax, and that he added, in reference to his political buddies up at Queen's Park, and I quote:

They'd better start thinking what they're doing. They've no appreciation of what brought Ontario to the position it occupies as the number one residential, commercial and industrial province of Canada. Somebody seems to have gone off the beam.

Hon. Mr. White: It's 1973!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Now that we've virtually exhausted our low-cost hydro power sources in the Province of Ontario, yearly boosts in power costs are bad enough. The higher costs of thermal and nuclear power may be inescapable. Cheap power, once the major advantage upon which this province's development has taken place, is fast disappearing.

But this government now steps in to make a bad situation worse. It's going to compound the higher power costs by taxing them. After all the lament that we have heard from the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the member for Chatham-Kent and others since Alberta announced its increase in the well-head price of gas, it is little wonder that Premier Lougheed—another Tory; how delightful it is to watch this go on in these days—rose in the Alberta Legislature the day after the Ontario budget to point out how Ontario had destroyed its own credibility.

Seldom, if ever, has a government undermined its own position in such a sweeping fashion as this government has done by boosting the sales tax from five to seven per cent; and extending it at the same time to include energy used for heating, cooking and lighting purposes—a vital need in our northern climate.

First, it has destroyed its own bargaining position in challenging Alberta's new pricing policies for energy. Second, after being so critical of Ottawa's inadequate fiscal policies, it has now duplicated those inadequacies and thereby worsened a fiscal mismatch in federal-provincial policies; assuring us that the high levels of unemployment won't be corrected and making a mockery of Ontario's plea for the past two years for a joint economic council to harmonize the fiscal policies of the federal and the 10 provincial governments.

And thirdly, it has made an even greater mockery of its own much-trumpeted efforts of tax reform. All along the line it is building new inequities in our tax structure, while at the same time posing as a champion of tax reform.

If the government were determined to raise more new revenues, instead of relying on the $350 million to $500 million which are hidden in its deliberately underestimated revenue forecast, then it had two major choices; the income tax or the sales tax.

To no one's surprise it refused to raise anything more from its friends in the corporate sector, or very little more; and it has gone through elaborate rationalizations as to why it shouldn't touch the more progressive personal income tax at this time.

The provincial Treasurer argues, for example, that structural changes in the income tax base are resulting in greater federal revenues, under the guise of tax reform, and that the provinces are being cut out of their fair share of these added revenues.

Furthermore, he argues that the indexing for inflation—that's another delicious overtone among the Tories at this point—that the indexing for inflation which the federal government has now adopted, will further cut down the province's share. Ironically, the idea was stolen—

Hon. Mr. White: That will be of short life.

Mr. MacDonald: The idea was stolen from Stanfield's tax proposals, so the provincial Tories are now being victimized by the tax reform of their federal counterparts.

Now it's possible to agree, Mr. Speaker, as I do, that the province is not getting a fair share of the income tax from the federal government, but to use all of these arguments as an excuse, either temporary or long-term, for forsaking the progressive income tax field and resorting to the highly regressive sales tax field is an exercise in illogic and political obfuscation.

Hon. Mr. White: I heard on CFRB the member wants to put the income taxes up.

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. White: I heard Jack Dennett say the member for York South wanted to increase the personal income tax.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Better than sales tax!

Mr. MacDonald: If that is what Jack Dennett said at least it wasn't a gross violation of what I had in my release; some of the other CFRB broadcasts were a garbled account and went across the whole country as a complete misrepresentation.

The shattering thing for me was that they attributed to me what I had correctly speculated were the Treasurer's thought processes. And that was a little appalling when I saw it come back.

Mr. Breithaupt: That is adding insult to injury.

Mr. MacDonald: Right!

Hon. Mr. White: The member wants higher personal income tax like Mr. Schreyer.

Mr. MacDonald: If the Treasurer just waits until I am finished I will show him where he should raise his revenue.

This is what this government is doing today, as I say—being illogical and engaging in political obfuscation.

In his recent Economic Council of Canada study—

Hon. Mr. White: Forty-two and a half per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: —entitled "The Pattern of Taxation in Canada", Allan F. Maslove said this: "The provincial general sales taxes, the second largest revenue source, are regressive over the entire income span".

Moreover, the provincial Treasurer has now compounded the regressivity of the sales tax by imposing it on individuals, on the people, while exempting the corporate sector from much of the burden. This government's approach is shot through with so many inequities that it is almost impossible to seek them all out for a proper listing.

For example, gas distribution companies already charge residential consumers more than twice the rate which they charge industry, and the gap is widening. According to the last annual report of the Consumers' Gas Co., average industrial charges had dropped from 63 to 61 cents per thousand cubic feet, while average residential charges went up from $1.26 to $1.27. I repeat, the gap is widening. And now the government steps in and imposes a seven per cent tax on the residential consumer, while imposing no charge on the manufacturer for energy used in production.

Thus they are encouraging industry to use up, even faster, this fuel which may be exhausted by the end of the century, while they are imposing a tax on the already overcharged residential consumer.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: Listen, Dad—

Mr. MacDonald: The Treasurer should listen himself and he may get some good out of this this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. White: The member wouldn't be talking out of both sides of his mouth, would he?

Mr. MacDonald: They are imposing a tax on the already overcharged residential consumer, allegedly as an incentive to conserve energy. You know, while the Frost Building blazes in lights every evening, I have been interested in watching it, the provincial Treasurer assures us that the lights are turned off in his office.

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order!

Mr. MacDonald: And yet he calls upon homeowners to turn down the thermostat to 69 deg. and have the family put on an extra sweater.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Stokes: And carry candles around.

Hon. Mr. White: I didn't say that at all.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Order!

Hon. Mr. White: I didn't say any such thing. I said that I had noticed in my own home, because of the emphasis on the shortage of energy, that we had—

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): The Treasurer's wife was talking about him!

Hon. Mr. White: —subconsciously turned our heating down from 72 to 69 and we are wearing a little more clothing.

Mr. Stokes: And subconsciously put on a sweater.

Hon. Mr. White: I did not suggest that everybody had to follow our custom.

Mr. Cassidy: He sure did.

Hon. Mr. White: No, I did not.

Mr. MacDonald: It's rather interesting. What day is it today?

Mr. Breithaupt: Tuesday.

Mr. MacDonald: Today is Tuesday and the budget came down last Thursday and for five days now it has been emblazoned all across the Province of Ontario that the provincial Treasurer said, "Turn down your thermostat and put on a sweater!" Now five days later, he's finally got up to deny it.

Boy, he is a fast one on the trigger. He is really fast on the trigger. This budget has got him down and I don't blame him for being down.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: I am sure there is a tape, so I think I can prove I didn't say it.

Mr. MacDonald: But, Mr. Speaker, the point I am trying to make with the provincial Treasurer is that he is pursuing the mice and ignoring the elephants in the world of energy conservation. He's becoming a threat to the lifestyle of the people of Ontario. Not only the bedrooms but every room of the house is going to be threatened by his invasion of privacy.

"Turn down the thermostat, put on a sweater", Big Brother demands; 1984 is here ahead of time!

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): And let the advertising lights blaze more brightly.

Mr. Stokes: George Orwell.

Mr. MacDonald: The people of Ontario might be willing to hearken to the provincial Treasurer's plea for energy conservation if he were consistent, but I remind members that his taxation policies are now going to bolster existing pricing policies which the government has done nothing about in the fuel board of the Province of Ontario.

The Attorney General (Mr. Bales) gave us some gobbledegook earlier about what the government may be going to do this time in the hearing. Those pricing policies encourage the corporate sector to use up this energy as fast as possible while he pleads with the little homeowner to cut it down.

Let me get back to the inequities with which the whole government's position is shot through. Manufacturing is exempt from the new energy tax for production but farmers, who are also engaged in production—

Mr. Paterson: Especially greenhouse operators.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. Greenhouse operators especially have to pay it.

Hon. Mr. White: Their production is exempt.

Mr. MacDonald: They have to pay it.

Hon. Mr. White: Their production is exempt.

Mr. MacDonald: With one hand the provincial Treasurer grants a greater equity to farmers on their property taxes, and with the other hand he takes it away with his energy tax. But perhaps—

Hon. Mr. White: Their production is exempt.

Mr. Cassidy: They didn't find that out until the backbenchers on the Tory side began to push.

Hon. Mr. White: Take a look at page 10 of my statement.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps the most blatant inequity—the Treasurer is getting too exercised. Even as a young man, his heart is going to suffer from this.

Perhaps the most blatant inequity of all, even though it be short-term, is that when he boosted the sales tax, he made it applicable on May 1 rather than immediately. Thus everybody who has the money can go out before May 1 and stock up on liquor and cars and television sets, you name it, thereby escaping the tax. Those in the lower income groups who don't have the money will have to pay the higher tax when they have saved up enough to acquire some urgent family need later in the year. All this, we note, is coming from the man who poses today as the champion of tax equity.

There is a footnote to my comments on this tax equity. I think, without breaking the sequence of it, I'd like to put on the record the observations of another man which were referred to by my leader this afternoon when he quoted from a speech of the member for Chatham-Kent in Strathroy—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Sarnial

Mr. Lewis: March 12.

Mr. MacDonald: Strathroy, on March 12.

Mr. Bullbrook: That close!

Mr. MacDonald: He never strays far from home these days. I quote:

Energy, like bread or milk or property taxes, is a commodity tax that has regressive incidence in its characteristics. In other words, a price increase on energy affects the little guy on the income scale almost as much as, and proportionately more than, the higher income earner. They likely consume comparable amounts of energy.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: He said, "For that reason—"

Mr. Stokes: Good old Darcy!

Mr. MacDonald: This is the member for Chatham-Kent speaking.

Mr. Stokes: Good old Darcy.

Mr. MacDonald: He is the energy adviser, if he only had somebody to listen to him in the Treasury.

Hon. Mr. White: That's why we have retail sales tax credits.

Mr. MacDonald: He said, "For that reason—"

Hon. Mr. White: That's why we have retail sales tax credits.

Mr. MacDonald: He said, "For that reason—"

What did the Treasurer say?

Mr. Lewis: He said, "That's why we have retail sales tax credits."

Mr. MacDonald: We'll get to that in a moment.

Hon. Mr. White: And that credit—

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer is worse than a windmill!

Mr. MacDonald: We'll get to that in a moment.

Mr. Lewis: He is a Don Quixote over there!

Mr. MacDonald: The member for Chatham-Kent said, "For that reason, price increases are an inequitable means for bringing about energy conservation." There can't be tax equity but here is what he is doing, defying the advice of the newly appointed energy adviser.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He'll be sorry; he'll get it!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: He forces his private obsession on the people of Ontario. He has this thing about energy taxes; it's a personal fixation of his.

Hon. Mr. White: No, I have fixations but that isn't one of them.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, it is. I know about the others. They are not worth raising publicly.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: They're dogs and flowers.

An hon. member: We can't tax those.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, so far I have been attempting to take a critical overview of the budget. I'd like now to challenge the provincial Treasurer on his own ground and on his own terms, because in his heart of hearts—I can hear the wheels turning over there—he's been saying that all of this is invalid, for his reasons. I am convinced that on his own ground his case is just as vulnerable as it is in the overview.

Being a one-time university lecturer, the provincial Treasurer has presented his budget in terms of an academic model which he believes to be impregnable in its logic. Academics always think their models are impregnable.

Like many academic models, it strays pretty far from reality, particularly because it is based on two premises, both of which are false. The first premise is that Ontario taxes are the lowest, or among the lowest, in Canada and certainly the most progressive. He implied this in his budget. On the TV panel which I shared with him on budget night over at CFTO, he not only implied it, he asserted it with all that super-confidence which characterizes the hon. gentleman. But despite his super-confidence, he is dead wrong.

In December, 1972, Alan M. Maslove completed the study I referred to earlier, the one for the Economic Council of Canada on "The Pattern of Taxation in Canada". Let me give a few of his documented conclusions.

Generally speaking, Maslove concluded that the Canadian tax system is extremely regressive at the lower income levels, and that there is a lack of progressivity over the remaining income levels. Now that should surprise no one. After all, it just confirms what the Carter study federally and the Smith study provincially have already documented for us.

Hon. Mr. White: That's why we are sifting these tax costs upwards.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Sifting?

Mr. MacDonald: We'll get to that in a moment. Despite the fact that Ontario has the highest income levels, Maslove then documented the regressive nature of our tax system and concluded:

With either income concept, the most regressive incidence pattern over the lower income levels is in Ontario. [He is talking about the whole of Canada.] In addition, over most of the income scale, taxation in Ontario is slightly more regressive (less progressive) than the national average except at the very highest level, where the Ontario pattern is more progressive.

Here's our new champion of the working people, the poor. Can I read that for the Treasurer again?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, please do.

Mr. MacDonald: Right! He says the very highest level is where the Ontario pattern is more progressive: everywhere else it is the most regressive.

Hon. Mr. White: How does he define the very highest?

Mr. MacDonald: Read the book—here.

Hon. Mr. White: How does he define it, over $1,000 or what?

Mr. MacDonald: Take this over to the provincial Treasurer and let him read it while he's listening.

Mr. Lewis: Can he read?

Mr. Cassidy: Can he understand?

Mr. Stokes: Are there any pictures in it for him?

Mr. MacDonald: On March 22, 1973, less than a month ago, the Economic Council of Canada released figures on the average effective tax rate per family unit. Ontario has the highest effective tax rate over the full income base and the second highest on the so-called broad income base. In short, the most recent figures available indicate that Ontario is one of the most heavily taxed provinces in Canada.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): But not the mining industry. They got $16 million. We don't tax them.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me proceed.

A study undertaken by the Canadian Tax Foundation compared tax rates in major provincial cities. It found that at the $5,000 income level, Toronto families paid 34.1 per cent of their income in provincial, municipal and federal taxes, the highest across the country. At the $10,400 income level, Toronto families had dropped into second place, paying 35.7 per cent of their income in taxes, compared with 36.4 per cent in Montreal.

Mr. Martel: That's a progressive step.

Mr. MacDonald: Significantly, Mr. Speaker, at the income level of $52,000—that's getting pretty rarified, although I know you're in it too—Toronto families had dropped to fourth place, paying 49.5 per cent, lower than Regina, Winnipeg and Montreal.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martel: What else is new?

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Back-scratchers!

Mr. MacDonald: Now the provincial Treasurer has a new pose; he's posing as the new champion of the poor. I don't think the poor are going to be fooled by any of this, but the danger is that the provincial Treasurer is going to fool himself.

The public image that he is presenting of Ontarians being the mostly lightly taxed in Canada is, to put it bluntly, false—and blatantly so. No man of integrity can continue to publicly argue such a case; and since the provincial Treasurer is a man of integrity, in spite of all his other faults, I trust that we have heard the last of that propaganda argument.

Let me proceed to the second premise upon which the provincial Treasurer's model is built. The Toronto Star's editorial calculations yesterday contained a serious error in mistaking the property tax reduction with the property tax credit, but they were right on when they contended that the provincial Treasurer is attempting a sleight-of-hand trick on the people of Ontario; it's something that might be funny on the stage with a magician but isn't very funny when it's in a provincial budget.

Hon. Mr. White: They just left out a few factors.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not defending the mistaken calculations in it, but their conclusion about the sleight of hand was dead on. In fact, they borrowed a phrase that I was intending to use in the budget debate and I rather objected to it being stolen and used in that fashion ahead of me.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Sleight of hand?

Mr. MacDonald: Sleight of hand, yes.

Put in the simplest terms, the provincial Treasurer argues—and here we are getting right onto his ground Mr. Speaker, right onto his ground—that the increase in sales taxes, including energy, will all be returned to the people in tax credits or larger grants to the municipalities to relieve the property tax, and that the net result will be no tax increase at all. Now there is a magician; no tax increase at all. In short, he is raising money here and he is paying it out there and the net result is that there is no higher tax in the overall.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, it is a neat trick, but it ain't true! In the first place, surely it is preposterous that any government should become involved in raising taxes by one of the most regressive levies at the provincial level, namely the sales tax—

Hon. Mr. White: Oh come now. It is not as regressive as the personal income tax.

Mr. MacDonald: —in order to relieve the burden of the most regressive tax at the local level, namely the property tax.

Hon. Mr. White: Come on, come on!

Mr. MacDonald: That is a bizarre procedure. Only a romanticist of the provincial Treasurer's exceptional capacities could become involved in that kind of an exercise and have the face to try to kid the public that it was a good thing.

However, let's look at it another way. On a full year the sales tax will return $340 million and the energy tax $100 million for a total of $440 million picked from the pockets of the people of Ontario—a modern salt tax. The tax credits, by the provincial Treasurer's own admission, will amount to $90 million a year on the sales tax, including energy, plus an extra $20 million on pensioners' rebates beyond the $20 million which they had been paying out in the $50 and $100 grants.

Hon. Mr. White: Plus $440 million for the municipalities.

Mr. MacDonald: That makes a total new payout, following this hike in sales tax, of $110 million—$90 million for the rebate on energy and sales tax, and $20 million new on the pensioners' rebates.

Hon. Mr. White: Plus $440 million for the municipalities.

Mr. MacDonald: But that is not the end—you know, he is uncanny—that is not the end of the government's generosity, the Treasurer contends. I read his mind so well that I can tell him what is in his budget before he has given it, quite frankly. That is the funny part of it.

In addition, the municipalities will receive, says the provincial Treasurer, $180 million more in grants through the property tax stabilization plan, which will cut local taxes by six mills in the south and 12 mills in the north. Look at the sceptical look on the face of the cabinet minister behind the Treasurer. He knows darned well that up in Moonbeam the taxes aren't going to come down 12 mills.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They are going to have to pay a lot more for their fuel. They need a lot of fuel in Moonbeam.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there are a few points here on which I might be inclined to quibble: $40 million of this $180 million are higher school grants which, may I remind you, were recommended by the Smith committee seven years ago and have been talked about ad nauseam ever since. Whether or not it is a fair proposition even, for this provincial Treasurer to include them as something of a rebate after a new sales tax put on this year is a little questionable.

But let's not quibble. Let's be generous with the provincial Treasurer. Let's accept his figures just as he presents them. The new revenue from the sales tax, including energy, will be $440 million in a full year. The payout in tax credits will be $110 million, plus another $180 million in larger municipal grants for a total payout of $290 million.

Hon. Mr. White: In brand new grants.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. The difference is $150 million more than the taxes he is going to collect. Yet the provincial Treasurer would have us believe that he is just taking the money in with one hand and paying it out with the other hand and the net result is that there is no tax increase across the Province of Ontario.

The scoundrel! He is trying to mislead us. When he is finished with the payout—

Hon. Mr. White: The member just dropped $260 million.

Mr. MacDonald: I haven't left out any $260 million!

And when he's finished with the payout—

Hon. Mr. White: Yes he has!

Mr. MacDonald: He's still going to have an extra $150 million in his greedy paw. That's the point.

Mr. Lewis: That's right. Right!

Mr. Cassidy: Right!

Mr. Lewis: And is it greedy!

Mr. MacDonald: However, let's deal with the issue once again on his terms.

The provincial Treasurer has an ace in the hole—and I want to be fair, I want to bring all his arguments into the picture.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): He's playing it pretty close to the vest!

Mr. MacDonald: The provincial Treasurer has an ace in the hole, so to speak. This payout, he says, will go mostly to the lower-income groups, thereby correcting the inequity in our tax structure, which he acknowledges. Well let's probe a bit into the detail.

Consider, first, this $180 million which is going to the municipalities to bring about a tax cut of six mills in the south and 12 mills in the north; for an average family saving, he says, of $25 in the south and $50 in the north. To begin with, the provincial Treasurer can't give us any assurance these cuts would take place across the board; and I'll bet him a double shot of his favourite Harvey's Shooting Sherry that it's not going to happen.

Hon. Mr. White: That's a bet.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, that's a bet. It'll be the cheapest bet I've ever had with the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. White: Let Hansard record that wager.

Mr. MacDonald: Furthermore, even if it did happen, what assurance is there that the average taxpayer is going to get the benefit of it?

Has the provincial Treasurer, for example, forgotten that over 43 per cent of municipal assessment in Ontario is commercial and industrial? In short, nearly half of his higher municipal grants will never get back to the people. Some of them will get back to small businessmen, who are deserving, but most of this 43 per cent will go back to business, fattening the corporate coffers still more.

Mr. Cassidy: Shame!

Mr. MacDonald: And what assurance can the provincial Treasurer give us that it's going to be passed on to the consumer? None of course; not a bit!

If the taxpayer is a homeowner, sure, he'll get it directly.

But according to the Dennis report on housing, one third of the people over $8,000 income, and one half of the people under $8,000 income, are tenants; not homeowners, tenants! What guarantee can the provincial Treasurer give us that, in the present housing scarcity, landlords will pass this saving in property taxes on to their tenants?

Mr. Martel: He's not here.

Mr. MacDonald: He's rather silent. He has nothing to say.

What mechanism has the provincial Treasurer set up to assure us that these savings will be passed back by the landlord to the tenant? None of course!

Here's an opportunity—I offer this suggestion to the provincial Treasurer, gratuitously—here's an opportunity for the government to move in and establish a rent review board. It could see that it happens.

Mr. Cassidy: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: But even the poor, struggling homeowner! He's assured of getting his municipal tax cut, or the sales tax rebate; it will come once a year, as a windfall, at tax-paying time; while, regularly, throughout the rest of the year, it will deprive his family of essential extra dollars for basic needs.

You know, Mr. Speaker, a windfall in April or May does little to compensate for hunger in January.

Mr. Cassidy: Hear, hear!

Mr. Laughren: Or cold!

Mr. MacDonald: Or is that a point which can't register with the provincial Treasurer, whose sentimentality shapes our tax structure in terms of exemptions for pedigreed dogs and pets while slapping taxes on low-income families and their children?

And I make a final point in this connection: The provincial Treasurer produced a table. Most members haven't seen it, except insofar as it was reproduced, one portion of it, in the Globe and Mail. So members may have that.

Interestingly enough this table, which purports to indicate the savings for families in the $5,000, $10,000 and $15,000 income bracket because of the rebates and the municipal grant payouts, wasn't included in the budget or in the budget papers. But the provincial Treasurer distributed it to the media during the press conference that was held prior to the delivery of the budget here in the Legislature.

Well you know, my research colleagues have examined this table in light of Statistics Canada publications—again I'd be glad to lend this to the provincial Treasurer so that he can get in touch with modern reality—

Hon. Mr. White: I think the member invented that quote. I don't see anything here about regressivity.

Mr. Martel: Come on!

Mr. Cassidy: The Globe and Mail found it when they reported on it.

Hon. Mr. White: Has the member enriched the chap's comments slightly?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: "Family Expenditure in Canada"—has the minister finished? Has he exhausted himself once again?

"Family Expenditure in Canada"—

Hon. Mr. White: Just between thee and me, the member cooked the books didn't he?

Mr. MacDonald: I didn't cook the books. I'll send the minister the page numbers by registered mail, through the government services.

Mr. Lewis: We heard the man who paraphrases.

Mr. MacDonald: And so, Mr. Speaker, the point I wanted to get to is that the Treasurer's table simply doesn't stand up. I'm not going to spend a lot of time arguing about this because it's nitty-gritty and it's difficult to deal with on the floor of the House.

Let me give the Treasurer a few examples. In the $5,000 income category, for example, he indicates that $14 a year is the sales tax that the family will likely have to pay. Well, from examination by this detached, impartial study here by Statistics Canada, the figure they come up with is just 50 per cent more—$21 a year.

And here is the most glaring of all. For the seven per cent tax on heat and light, the Treasurer estimates an annual tax of only $7. Isn't this mind-boggling? He is suggesting that the total heat and light bill for the year is only $100. Well, obviously it's absurd.

Mr. Stokes: Just double that.

Mr. MacDonald: This is Ontario, not Tahiti. Statistics Canada fixes it at $18. Quite frankly, my common-sense judgement would be that since the Treasurer himself fixed it at $28 for the $10,000 income bracket, it would be approximately the same cost—

Mr. Lewis: Surely!

Mr. MacDonald: —and rebate for a person who is in the $5,000 bracket. Well, let me quote the member for Chatham-Kent.

Mr. Stokes: For sure; that's right!

Mr. MacDonald: He argued that they each use approximately the same amount of heat—and it's regressive; it's regressive. So the Treasurer has got a total error of at least $18—and heaven knows that $18 could go up to $28—on those two items alone.

And when you get down to the property reduction tax—well this is why I am not going to pursue it too far, because you get into an argument and nobody can prove anything on this particular point.

The Treasurer says that the family of $5,000—according to his table—is going to save $15 during the year; well maybe. But there's plenty of chance he's going to get none of it—particularly if he happens to be a tenant. And tenants represent a very significant proportion of the people.

To sum up, the Treasurer's miscalculations suggest that the $5,000 income family will save $30. In fact, Mr. Speaker, they are going to be lucky to break even—lucky to break even. So the lower-income group—the worthy benefactor of the provincial Treasurer's elaborate exercise in tax raising and redistribution—will get back about the same amount as he pays out.

And as for the growing number of taxpayers to be found in the $10,000 bracket, there is no doubt that they will be paying out in taxes far more than the mythical $9 saving the Treasurer suggested they're going to have when the tax credit and property tax reductions get back to them.

So the whole exercise, Mr. Speaker, isn't just sleight of hand; it comes close to being a fraud—and an expensive fraud at that.

But there's a final point; and with all his skilful political footwork, the minister has managed to conceal it until now. I take pleasure in revealing it.

All these tax credits paid out of the revenues raised from the regressive sales tax, are designed to correct the inequity of the two per cent hike in sales tax. Even if one were to assume that they did correct that inequity—and I have just submitted pretty solid evidence that they don't, or may not—the government is doing nothing about correcting the inequity in the basic five per cent sales tax burden under which our people have laboured for years.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: In fact, the government tacitly concedes that the inequity is going to be built into our tax structure in perpetuity—or for at least as long as the Tories are in power. And thank God, that won't be in perpetuity.

If the government is willing to live with the $400 million deficit level in this budget, how much better it would have been for them to have used the $350 million to $500 million or more hidden revenues that will come in during the year to have made tax credits available to eliminate or at least reduce the inequity in the basic five per cent regressive sales tax. Instead the Treasurer has compounded the regressivity of our tax structure by adding two per cent on the sales tax and extending it to energy for light, heat and cooking.

As my hon. friend from Lakeshore would say in one of his bursts of righteous indignation, "Shame on you, White!"

The member for Lakeshore didn't even hear it! He responds more to the Treasurer!

Mr. Lawlor: He is becoming more shameless every day.

Hon. Mr. White: I don't think he is aligning himself with the rich the way the member for York South is.

Mr. Martel: Where is the Treasurer standing now?

Mr. Lewis: Well, the problem with giving the budget is that one can't defend it; it is indefensible.

Mr. MacDonald: In case the provincial Treasurer hasn't found it, I am just reminded the quote from Maslove is on page 73. I am sorry I haven't got the line for him.

Mr. Lewis: Page 73. Beside a coloured picture, if the Treasurer has difficulty finding it.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: If the provincial Treasurer could only read the famous quote.

I would like to turn now to two areas of the budget, the so-called farm and municipal packages, where I have some qualified words of commendation, and I hope this comes as a bit of relief to the provincial Treasurer.

First the farm: The provincial Treasurer says that in moving to a 50 per cent rebate on property taxes, he has in effect lifted property taxes off farmland altogether. I don't know that that generalization will accurately reflect the situation in every case, because it will depend on what portion of farm property is in land and what proportion is in residence and buildings. But generally it is no doubt true, and that being the case, I want to congratulate the provincial Treasurer.

In 1973 the government has moved to implement a measure of property tax relief for farmers that was included in the NDP programme when the party was founded in 1961. That's about the normal pace at which the Tories come to grips with urgent problems and I suppose one shouldn't be ungrateful for little blessings that finally have been received.

I am going to move on to the second area; the property tax stabilization plan. Again I want to congratulate the provincial Treasurer, because what the government in effect is now doing is implementing the municipal tax foundation programme which I first detailed in this Legislature in 1968.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go into any detailed analysis of this new so-called property tax stabilization plan. I am going to be very frank with you. We would like a lot more time to analyse its impact and to compare its advantages, if any, and its deficiencies, some of which are obvious, with the municipal tax foundation proposal which we made some six years ago.

There are one or two obvious weaknesses. For example why, when you move with the resource equalization grant—which is to eliminate the assessment base inadequacy of any municipality—why when you move to eliminate that, do you eliminate only 50 per cent instead of 100 per cent? Of course, it is the Tory way to do it. If the Treasurer is going to remove the inequity, remove it totally! It would only cost $52 million more, and in a budget of nearly $7 billion, surely if you are going to do it, do it whole hog and remove the inequity completely; but no.

I want to come back to that later, because I don't think we should drag our feet in finally coming to grips with this point.

Hon. Mr. White: I just love the way the member says, "Only $52 million." That really touches me. As C. D. Howe said, "What's a million?"

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I will come to it. I will come to it in a moment.

The second weakness that stares out at one is that once again this government is short-changing the north. Now, I grant you that the north is going to get higher grants. In every instance it is going to get higher grants, whether they be the general purpose grants, or whether they be the resources equalization grants which are available to municipalities all across the Province of Ontario.

Surely in the year 1973 we have come to recognize as a basic in our policy consideration that in the north we have got unique problems that are a product of weather, of rock and topographical conditions, and many other things. This government was beginning to meet some of these unique problems of the north by the mine revenue payments. In fact, last year this extra payment to the north—because of the area's unique problems and the costs involved in meeting them—through the mine revenue payments was going to be about $13 million; minus a bit that's peanuts which may go to a few southern municipalities. What is the government now going to pay specially to the north in the so-called grant that meets the special needs of the north?

Mr. Stokes: Wait until the government hears from Manitowadge; just wait until it hears.

Mr. MacDonald: It is going to be paying $8.6 million. So it is chiselling about $4.5 million from the north once again in terms of a special grant to meet the special problems, the unique problems of the north, apart from anything else that is given across the board equally to all constituents.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): We are always being short-changed down here.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there is another aspect of this property tax stabilization plan that I just want to throw out quietly to the provincial Treasurer for some consideration. Quite frankly, this is another reason why we want to take a more detailed look at this before we come to a final conclusion.

I think the time has come for the province to practise what it preaches. The province has always preached that it was entitled to a fair share of the growth taxes from the federal government. I think the time has come for the province to practise, at least on an experimental basis to begin with, the giving of some of the growth taxes, some points in the income tax field.

I think there are other advantages that would flow from this. As the government moves toward—and I know this is in the mind of the provincial Treasurer—moves toward trying to restore some of the lost autonomy at the local level through the development of more efficient administrative units, whether they be regional government or not, one of the best ways to restore that autonomy is to give these municipalities money that they know is theirs as part of a growth tax, so that they won't always regard themselves almost as a "kept woman", looking for a living allowance from sugar daddy at Queen's Park.

Mel Swart who, apart from being provincial president of the New Democratic Party in the Province of Ontario today, is a member of the regional government in Niagara and a past president and secretary of the Ontario Association of Mayors and Reeves, has been preaching this for years. Dave Crombie has been arguing for it with more and more vigour.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit a slight interruption, this matter was discussed by the municipal liaison committee and by me earlier today. I am looking into the matter.

Mr. MacDonald: I am reading the Treasurer's mind even more than I thought.

Hon. Mr. White: The meeting, incidentally, is still going on, but I tore myself away to listen to my hon. friend.

Mr. MacDonald: That is rather good because the Treasurer sees the quality of the ideas by coming over here.

The point I was making was that people who are leaders, acknowledged leaders in the municipal field, have been arguing this. Indeed I understand, although I wasn't there to be able to share it, that at the trilevel conference that was held down in the Four Seasons Hotel this was one of the main considerations. So I repeat, perhaps on an experimental basis to begin with—on what basis, whether it has to be regional government or county level or what, I have no definite conclusions—the granting to municipal governments of some share of the growth taxes, mainly the income taxes, is something that should be worked in. How the Treasurer works that in with his new model, the property tax stabilization plan, I don't exactly know. But we'll do some thinking on it and give him the benefit of our thoughts at a later date when we get into the estimates.

Mr. Speaker, we in the NDP have always operated on the basis that, while it is our responsibility as an opposition party to criticize the budget, it is also our obligation to present some alternatives.

Mr. Stokes: We are always positive and constructive.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to do that as briefly as possible. The Treasurer shouldn't get too excited because it won't be as brief as perhaps he'd hope.

I have already indicated that we oppose the sales tax increase. Instead, living with the $400 million deficit level which the government itself has presented, it would have been possible to use the greater revenues which will come in during the year to make tax credits and higher municipal grants available, thereby eliminating some of the inequity in the basic five per cent sales tax and the property taxes. All that could have been done, achieving the objectives of the budget without imposing more regressive taxes.

But in our view this government need not and should not rest there. There are other pressing needs, such as—as I just pointed out—the 100 per cent rather than the 50 per cent resources equalization grants, to move more closely to producing a capacity for all municipalities to bring their services up to an appropriate provincial standard.

Let me illustrate another pressing need. The government is playing games with this vital issue of housing. The shortage today of adequate housing at a reasonable price is surely one of the most serious problems facing the province. The government has long since tacitly admitted by its support of the OHC that the private sector cannot deliver the amount nor the kind of housing that is needed.

The number of OHC housing starts has declined seriously in the past year. From a record 11,430 in 1971, housing starts for the OHC rent-gear-to-income programme declined to 6,012 in 1972. Grasp that, Mr. Speaker—from 11,430 down to 6,012.

This is no time to gear down on the housing programme in the Province of Ontario. The children of the postwar baby boom are now in their mid-twenties, housing demand is rising and prices are skyrocketing.

One might have hoped that the government would make a vastly increased financial commitment to the OHC as a sort of cornerstone of its budgetary programme. The Treasurer seemed to indicate that such was the case, and I quote:

... the government has been able to effect a shift in investments to the fields of housing and urban development. . . . During a four-year period, the amount of capital investment in education has declined from 60 to 25 per cent of total investment; investment in public housing and development has increased to take up the largest share at 41 per cent of the total . . .

He includes a table showing an investment of $269.9 million in housing this year.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, on close examination, this $269.9 million turns out to be a sham. It resembles the infamous $500 million, 130,000-job housing programme promised in the 1971 Throne Speech.

Mr. Lewis: The Allan Crossman special.

Mr. MacDonald: The members will remember that fiasco. The promise evaporated within a couple of days.

The government's financial statements appended to the budget contain a detailed breakdown of government investments. Investments in housing and urban development take the form of loans and advances to three institutions: the Housing Corp. Ltd., Ontario Housing Corp. and Ontario Student Housing Corp.

Here is what has happened, Mr. Speaker. The provincial government's investment in housing increased from $94.3 million in 1970 to $134.9 million in 1971, with a further increase to $137 million in 1972 and a decline to $125.9 million in 1973. The difference between the intended investment in housing this year of $125.9 million and the $269.9 million figure that is listed in the budget, is the $144 million in that elusive North Pickering suspense account.

Quite apart from the fact that the $144 million will produce no housing in 1973 and therefore it is an illusion, it is likely that most of the $144 million will not be spent at all.

In summing up his budget the Treasurer stated, on page 33, "We have provided this full amount [$144 million] in our estimates but our own net cost could be substantially lower if a satisfactory agreement for CMHC participation can be reached." He then goes on to suggest, "Ontario's public debt will be reduced by between $100 and $200 million in 1973-1974 largely because of the unutilized portion of the $144 million North Pickering suspense account."

Mr. Speaker, when the provincial Treasurer wants to show that the province is investing large amounts of capital in home construction he adds the $144 million. When he wants to show that the province is reducing a public debt, he again uses the $144 million. That's what I would describe as a case of duplicity.

Mr. Lewis: Right! It is like his tax credit. He uses the same amount for everything.

Mr. MacDonald: This government shouldn't be playing this sort of game with the housing shortage. This should be the centrepiece of any social and economic strategy for a government today. Social, because in no other way can we do more to remove the hardship suffered by people living in substandard housing and paying exorbitant rents. Economic, because a massive housing programme could do more than anything else to create jobs in large numbers.

How can we do all this? This, of course, will be the provincial Treasurer's legitimate question. All these pressing needs, how are they going to be paid for? I'm going to suggest three tax sources, none of which would seriously counter the desirable expansionary thrust of any budget today.

First is succession duties; second, resource taxes; and third, a full capital gains tax. I want to take a look at each one of those in some measure of detail.

First, the succession duties. A couple of days ago, with the assistance of our research department, I released to the public a statement on succession duties which is, for the most part, an analysis of the report of the advisory committee on succession duties which the government appointed and the minister in his budget has thanked so graciously for its report.

One of the most neglected fields of taxation in this country, in our view in the New Democratic Party, is the transfer of wealth between generations.

Mr. Martel: It gives some a head start.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to quote one or two sources to indicate that this isn't a wild doctrinaire socialist concept. It's a concept which is quite frankly advocated by many people who take an objective approach to the whole question of tax structures and equity within the tax structure. For example, even the advisory committee on succession duties, in its own report, had this quote:

To the extent that the income tax ignores capacity to pay as represented by ownership of capital assets, the whole revenue system departs from the principle of ability to pay. Taxes based on wealth can mitigate this deficiency.

It's to be found in the appendix, on page 3.

Even the member for Chatham-Kent, in 1972, after the federal government had announced its intention of moving out of the estates tax field, had this to say in a speech to the Estates Planning Council of Ontario: "The principles of equity and ability to pay both demand maintenance of some form of wealth taxation, in spite of the recent introduction of capital gains taxation."

Prof. John Bossons of the Institute for Policy Analysis at the University of Toronto has made a very careful study of this field. He revealed an estimate to the Canadian Tax Foundation in 1971 that there's something like $4.5 billion owned by approximately 200,000 Canadians, who are escaping a fair share of taxation. His observation was: "It is difficult to find any social or economic rationale for eliminating the estate tax."

Now let me put it on the record, without going into the details, that this government from the days of Charlie MacNaughton through the member for Chatham-Kent and now confirmed by the present provincial Treasurer, has indicated that its intention is a phased elimination of the succession duties.

When one reads between the lines of the report of their own hand-picked advisory committee on succession duties one comes to the conclusion that the committee doesn't agree with that. They bow out and say that it is not their job to say whether there should be succession duties; that's a political decision—and they are right. They also bow out when they are discussing the level at which succession duties should be fixed because, they argue, that's a political decision—and again they are right. It's interesting, though, that they suggest that for purposes of illustrating their point, the level should be kept at what it was then; namely, about $75 million.

But the most important thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the report of the advisory committee on succession duties, a report from a committee appointed by this government, shot down the three oft-repeated premises that the government is always using as an argument against succession duties. Just let me note these for you.

The first premise is that Ontario's duty has an undesirable impact on small business and family farms. Well, the committee sent out 277 questionnaires to farm estates and 294 to small business estates, and it got a phenomenal response—78 per cent from the farm estates and 67 per cent from the small business estates. Only 10 farm estates and only 12 business estates reported that the burden of succession duties or estate tax had any effect on the decision to sell, and the taxes were not the only reason in most cases.

Mr. Martel: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald: Surprisingly, 161 farms out of 271 responding were not sold, and 157 businesses out of the 197 reporting were not sold.

An hon. member: Of course not!

Hon. Mr. White: It's the ones that were sold that worry me.

Mr. Renwick: The ones that were sold were sold for a multiple of reasons.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What is the NDP's response to the succession duties on farmlands?

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Is the hon. member going to give us the NDP response to the need for succession duties on farmlands?

Mr. MacDonald: We agree. As a matter of fact, on this occasion we, with the Tories assisting, badgered the Liberals in Ottawa to change it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: All right. So why is my friend putting the position forward that it has nothing to do with the sale of the farms?

Mr. MacDonald: I am reporting what's in the report of this committee that was set up by this government—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is called a straw man.

Mr. Renwick: It is not a straw man at all.

Mr. MacDonald: I am trying to undercut the proposition that they are using in these arguments. It is the usual kind of straw man raised by the Liberals. There was so little in their criticism of the budget that they—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The hon. member is cranking up to be knocked down.

Mr. Martel: What was that policy they stated yesterday?

Mr. MacDonald: The second premise is that the succession duties and estate taxes have an undesirable impact on Canadian ownership.

The questionnaires returned—and note this, Mr. Speaker—indicated that in no case did a sale occur that resulted in control passing to foreign ownership, either for farms or family businesses. And I assume that this questionnaire was scientifically distributed and scientifically framed.

The third premise is that the taxation of capital gains under the income tax system is an adequate substitute for inheritance taxes. Well, the committee points out that less than one-half of the assets held by Ontario estates are capable of producing capital gains or losses. The principal residences, retirement plan benefits, insurance proceedings, savings and fixed-interest-bearing investments, for example, are unlikely to produce capital gains or losses.

The committee does recognize that there is a "double whammy" effect on estates from succession duties and that the deemed realization of capital gains is a debt. It suggests an Ontario succession duty credit to offset this, but does not consider this to be a perfect solution and would prefer a change in the federal income tax law to solve the problem.

It goes on to mention many other things, Mr. Speaker. It refers to the Act as a quaint Act, like the Dower Act and Line Fences Act. It points out that the Act is so out of date that it has actuarial compensations prescribed on the basis of 1937 annuity tables based on "male lives only" and the use of a four per cent interest assumption. Now, that's really up to date.

It goes on to point out that the Act is so out of touch with modern reality—and here, I am sure, our swinging provincial Treasurer would agree—that it puts all non-relatives in as “strangers,” so that you’ve got “relatives” and “non-relatives.” It comments: “People do not leave property to strangers, but to friends or lovers,” and chooses to head one of its tables in appendix B as “non-relatives” and in brackets “friends, mistresses, etc.”

Mr. Lewis: No, no!

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, it was a swinging committee.

Mr. Lewis: No!

Mr. MacDonald: It was a swinging committee. It goes on to talk about tax avoidance, and the simple proposition of families setting up companies in Alberta. A sort of domestic tax haven—and all of the other tax havens around the world. It has something to say, for example, about the rates of duty, but I repeat, it adds that whatever be the rate of duty, it is operating on the assumption that we should be maintaining at least the present level of revenue, which was $75 million at the time that it was doing this study.

I want to get to the question of potential revenue, because I think this is of significance for this—

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member leaves that subject, he inadvertently misled the House by using what he purported to be my words, namely, “phased elimination of succession duties.” I have never contemplated any such thing. The words used are, “phased decreases in succession duties.” I quite agree that there should be substantial taxes on very large estates.

Mr. MacDonald: That is rather interesting. That’s rather interesting, because if I go back to his predecessors—and I don’t know whether I happen to have the quotations right here; let’s take a look at what a former Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) said:

The government intends to continue its policy of gradually reducing the level of succession duties as the capital gains tax matures.

I suppose, to be fair, that doesn’t necessarily say explicitly that they are going to reduce them to zero.

What about Charlie MacNaughton?

As capital gains taxation becomes fully mature in the years ahead, undue accumulations of wealth will be moderated. In Ontario’s view, therefore, the need for taxation of estates will diminish and such taxation should be gradually eliminated.

Mr. Martel: Oh, oh, oh, oh!

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I understood the hon. member was quoting from my document.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no. What I said—

Hon. Mr. White: I would never contemplate eliminating death duties on very large estates.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, okay; I am very glad to have that assurance.

Mr. Cassidy: You will tax only five a year, is that right?

Mr. MacDonald: It’s a small measure of progress if we’ve had this retreat.

What I said was that there had been statements by two former Treasurers, now confirmed by this minister, toward phased elimination. I was a bit inaccurate. The previous Treasurer wanted it as a phased elimination. The minister is now saying that as provincial Treasurer he is not in favour of complete elimination; it’s a retreat. I’ll take note. It’s a little new story. The 2,000 or 3,000 families across the province who are paying estate taxes will be very interested.

I want to get around to the potential revenues. The committee notes that the succession duties are yielding about 25 per cent of taxable estates, but with the broader exemptions now in effect, from those announced in the budget, we can expect the effective rate of tax to drop to about 20 per cent or less. And the committee’s revised schedule of rates and exemptions would have resulted in an effective rate of about 20 per cent.

We in the New Democratic Party question whether a rate of 20 to 25 per cent is an adequate return to the state on transfers between generations, especially if there is a generous allowance for widows and dependants. The balance of beneficiaries are generally receiving windfall gains which they have done nothing to earn. It doesn’t seem to us to be unreasonable to expect an effective return of 50 per cent from the estates—

Mr. Martel: I’ll buy that.

Mr. MacDonald: —of the approximately 17 per cent of the persons dying each year in Ontario who have sufficient wealth to be taxable under the exemption proposals of the committee.

We don't advocate a flat rate of 50 per cent, because we think that there should be equity in tax structures at all levels and therefore the tax should be graded. The fairest way of taxing inheritance is the method recommended and argued by the Carter committee, to make it part of the income of the inheritor and to tax it at full income tax rates so that his ability to pay is taken into account.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let's get this in figures. We estimate that a 50 per cent return on succession duties would bring in twice what the province received in 1970-1971 before the exemptions were drastically altered—that is about $160 million. There will be some natural growth in the tax base in the period since 1970-1971—it has been averaging about 10 per cent a year up until then—so it would not be unreasonable to expect $175 million to $200 million, assuming the exemption pattern proposed by the committee is adopted. This means an increase in revenues over the present budget figure—which incidentally is now down to $59 million. It means that there would be an increase in revenues of anywhere from $116 million to $141 million.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): In 1970-1971 you could only leave your wife $75,000 tax free. Is the member suggesting that this is your policy?

Mr. MacDonald: No, it went up to, way beyond—

Mr. Good: It went up to $125,000 and then $250,000 and then $500,000.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Mr. Good: You want to take money from widows.

Mr. MacDonald: That's right.

Mr. Good: Your figures are three years old.

Mr. MacDonald: Where does the member stand on this?

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. MacDonald: Where does the member stand on this?

When we heard the Liberal criticism, they took the basically irresponsible position of saying that they have the right to criticize the government, but no obligation to present any alternatives. Now we have a few inter-jections from which the members can guess as to what their alternative may be.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): They wouldn't have a clue to start with.

Mr. MacDonald: Well Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer will shake his head. The Treasurer will shake his head at these figures and say that the estate taxation at that level—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: What a raucous noise that is up there.

The Treasurer will say that the estate taxation at that level will reduce funds available for investment. Well, everyone knows that the bulk of investment funds come from the returned earnings of big businesses and capital cost allowances; and estate taxation may be an incentive for owners of capital to put it to work. Both the Treasurer and the committee may feel that a greater inheritance tax will encourage tax avoidance schemes, and the flight to tax havens.

Now I say, Mr. Speaker, that it's the job of this government to close as many loopholes as possible and to co-operate with the federal government in shutting off tax havens; not to throw in the sponge and eliminate the tax altogether. I also say that we cannot be certain of the amount of tax avoidance until we try the new rate. If then we find they are detrimental to our growth at home, that is the time to reconsider the question.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there is one source of revenues that can be got without countering—I repeat—any of the economic and fiscal thrust that a budget today should have.

I want to turn now to the resource industries. For years we have been saying, Mr. Speaker, that resource industries are one of the great untapped sources of revenue in this province. And for years the government has been saying that imposing higher levies on them would discourage exploration, stop the development of new mines and jeopardize mining jobs. For years, they have been saying that the mines are the lifeblood of the north, and that exporting minerals is one of the chief sources of Ontario's wealth.

Only last month, for example, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) spoke to the Prospectors and Developers Association and assured it that he was still on the government's wavelength. He said:

Nor can we in Ontario assume, as some have suggested, that we can continue to load the mining industry with taxes and other basic costs of refining ores in Ontario, raising our prices to a non-competitive level.

You know, it's really a make-believe world that he lives in—a make-believe world.

And the Treasurer, in the budget this year, reiterated the government's position by pledging "to maintain a total tax burden on the mining industry approximately at its present level." Well, I'll show you a little later that that burden is a flea-bite.

And now Eric Kierans has come along.

I just want to pause here, Mr. Speaker, because I have been fascinated in watching the Pavlovian-dog reaction from that side of the House; and particularly that of the Minister of Natural Resources, who gets all his documents written by people who have moved out of industry.

This government is a trustee on behalf of the people of Ontario, to protect their wealth. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that if anybody, and particularly if it happens to be a man who has been a successful businessman, who is a former president of the Montreal Stock Exchange, a former cabinet minister, if he comes forward with ideas with regard to the mistaken policies of the past, we are entitled to something more than the Pavlovian-dog reaction; because what government spokesmen prove by their reaction is that they are not trustees of the people's wealth.

Mr. Laughren: They are highgrading it from us.

Mr. MacDonald: What they are doing is playing patois for the industries, and I think it is about time we took a look at what these industries have been able to get away with. I am not going to do it in our terms, I am not going to do it in the terms of what some people might choose to describe as socialist, doctrinaire socialist or what all. I am going to do it in terms of Eric Kierans' analysis, because he was invited to take a look at it in terms of the Manitoba situation.

Mr. Martel: It's a ripoff!

Mr. MacDonald: In analysing Manitoba's resource policies, he has exposed the pattern of Canadian resource policies generally, and he shows that it is basically a sellout of the people's own wealth. Let me quote one paragraph from his recent report on natural resource policies in Manitoba, to be found on page 7:

A province may boast that it is rich in natural resources and point to the variety and size of its deposits of extractive minerals. Physically, the evidence appears to be there. Economically the boast is idle if the costs of bringing the resources to markets are less than, or simply equal to, the value received by their sale. There has been merely a consumption of the wealth and some activity during the process.

Similarly, a province may decide to turn over its wealth for exploitation by others, to whom the surpluses or rent will accrue. In return the province will receive some small addition to its labour force as people are employed in extracting its wealth. It is the province which is defining its people as drillers and miners and incapable of fulfilling a role as owners, managers and developers of their own wealth.

In this instance there may well be surpluses, but the province cannot on that account continue to call itself rich in resources, because it will have given away all its claim to the surpluses generated. The wealthy will be the operators, the corporations to whom the benefits now belong; the province would merely preside over the consumption of the wealth while receiving little or no income; and as the wealth is slowly eaten away the landlords become poorer.

That is what is happening in Ontario. In exchange for a few jobs and some mining and processing activity, we have given away great quantities of our priceless, irreplaceable resources. The dollars earned have not come back to the people of the north, they have not come back to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Martel: The member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) thinks so.

Mr. MacDonald: They have not been available for investment in secondary industries and new job-creating activities. Our mineral wealth has been transformed into another form of wealth, but the results of the transformation have accrued to the benefit of a few whom we have allowed to exploit this wealth.

I don't deny that the jobs which have been created are very important to us and to the people whose livelihoods depend on them. But in recognizing their value we have averted our eyes from our disappearing wealth, the disappearing billions which could have created more jobs and underpinned both our northern and southern communities, knitting them together rather than letting them develop in isolation and at a lesser rate.

Kierans sums it up this way:

Resource-rich nations that continually yield up the value of their wealth in return for the labour employed in its exploitation, will never be more than resource nations. They lose the opportunity to form their own capital, capital which will enable them to break out of that very reliance on their resource base and reduce their independence on foreign investments.

The few jobs, the economic activity and the export of dollars which we have gained, have not been anywhere equivalent in value to what we have given to the exploiters. Because they have been dealing in commodities which have a real or an artificially scarce value, they have been able to command what the economists call "economic rent."

Mr. Martel: The robber barons!

Mr. MacDonald: And what Eric Kierans calls super-profits, profits above and beyond the normal returns on their investment.

An hon. member: The Treasurer knows about economic grants.

Mr. MacDonald: Kierans and outstanding economists like John Stuart Mill and Professor A. C. Pigou claim that such super-profits on natural resources belong to the public, who own the resources, and assert that it is the obligation of governments to ensure that these excess profits flow to the people.

In his report Kierans charges that the governments in Canada have failed dismally in discharging this responsibility. He sums it up on page 39:

Governments have been willing to sacrifice not only the present but the future stream of revenue flows from their resources. In return for the direct costs, wages principally, being spent within the province, they have given up not only the normal profits on the capital employed, which they could have easily found within themselves, but also the rents and surpluses that come from owning scarce resources in a period of rapidly increasing industrialization and population growth.

He concludes in another passage:

To be satisfied with the new jobs created and to forgo the surpluses and profits inherent in the development of its own endowment is hardly the mark of a strong and mature government.

Mr. Martel: There was one-third of one per cent last year for the budget!

Mr. MacDonald: Kierans calls for an evaluation of governments' stewardship of the vast natural wealth of this country. I put his searching questions to the government of Ontario:

Has the government, as landlord of the public resources, received any rent, any net income at all from the private sector to which it has transferred the right to exploit that wealth? If so, how much? How much new capital has been generated out of the transformation of the natural resources? What proportion accrued to the agents, the operators? What proportion was added to the treasury of the landlords, the people of the province? If these proportions are judged to be unfair, what measures can the government take to rectify the imbalances?

Mr. Martel: Leo the lion says we won't change it.

Mr. MacDonald: To the first question we already have the answer. The provincial government has received in rent or tax receipts from the mining industry an annual average of just under $25 million from all forms of taxation in the three years from 1968 to 1970. The industry paid another $23 million to the federal government and an average of $5 million to local governments in the same period. Complete figures are not available for the later years, but the trend is downwards.

In the same three years average value of production was $1.2 billion, so that the net return to the people of Ontario was 2.1 per cent of the production.

What should we be getting? Again, Eric Kierans shows the way to evaluate this. First, he knocks down the myth that mining is a high risk industry that requires lots of capital. That done, the argument that they need special tax treatment disappears.

Then he calculated the actual rate of return before taxes on capital invested, both equity and debt, for the three sectors of the mining industry. He found that it ranged, Mr. Speaker, from 10 per cent for firms engaged in mining and smelting only, to 28 per cent for integrated companies, and almost 46 per cent for those in mining alone. He regarded these figures as low, since some excess returns are probably hidden in some overhead costs of mining companies which could be reduced.

He suggested that any return over 15 per cent be considered super-profit or economic rent and that government should aim at regaining this excess for the people. This could be done by a variety of tax policies or by setting up Crown corporations to carry on operations where excess profits exist.

Kierans recommends the latter for the highly profitable mining and development sector but not for the smelting and refining sector, which does not appear to have super-profits on the average, though individual companies such as Inco may have such profits. For governments taking the tax route he suggests the following package, and I draw this to the attention of the provincial Treasurer:

First, a 15 to 20 per cent tax on the value of production instead of a mines profits tax. This is the pattern in the petroleum industry now. He prefers the production tax to the profits one, because of the enormous difficulties in separating mining income from smelting and refining profits in integrated companies. Where mining lands and rights are held in freehold, a tax on production might be considered an indirect tax and be ultra vires. There is no problem where mining rights are held by the Crown and leased out, as is the case in most of Canada, but not in all parts of Ontario. This is something we would have to look into if we adopted Kierans' proposal.

Secondly, he suggests a tax on the value of reserves. As Kierans notes, it's remarkable that this form of property has not been subject to assessment and tax, where all others are. Not only would it bring in substantial revenues, but it would force companies either to develop reserves or to release excess ores often held for no other purpose than to deny them to competitors.

Thirdly, he suggests a mineral tax of $1 an acre on all existing leases. It would not be primarily a revenue device, but a means of speeding the return of all mineral rights to the province.

Since the Ontario government doesn't seem inclined to consider the Crown-corporation approach as a means of obtaining the economic rent for the people from their resources, I recommend that it consider these three tax proposals. We estimate they would bring in an extra $300 million a year from the mining industry.

A tax on the value of production at 15 per cent would bring in about $225 million, since production is now running at about $1.5 billion a year. The yield of tax on reserves is difficult to estimate, but a 10-cents-per-ton levy on Inco's reserves alone would bring in over $38 million. I think we might expect $100 million from such a tax overall.

Mr. Stokes: Instead of that we have a depletion allowance.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. A doubling of Ontario's 50-cent acreage tax would bring in $650,000 more, but its purpose would not be primarily revenue. A little more might be obtained if the higher rates were imposed on areas under lease, where the government desired to spur repatriation of the mineral rights to the Crown for immediate development.

The combination of these taxes would yield about $325 million, which is $300 million increase over our present take.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, the heavily financed lobby of the mineral industry will say that these taxes would kill the industry. But the government cannot be unaware that many minerals are becoming in very short supply. It cannot ignore the fact that royalty rates are being raised all across this country, and even the federal government has admitted recently that it has been taking too little from the industry from leases.

I will let Kierans have the last word in giving advance to this government:

The problem is the political one of designing a programme of orderly transition from the mistaken policies of the past to the new institutions and tax policies that will capture economic rent, prevent their dispersion through inefficiency and the waste of excess investment and exploration, and apply the value of replacing the depleted wealth to the needs and priorities of the people concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! I wonder if I might interrupt the member for just a moment to make an announcement which I have to make before 5 o'clock.

In accordance with standing order 27(g), I have received two notices from members that they have been dissatisfied with certain answers given during the question period. I have notice from Mr. Deans, noting his dissatisfaction with the answer given by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development having to do with lack of flood control effort by the government. I have notice from Mr. Nixon, the hon. Leader of the Opposition, of his dissatisfaction with the Premier's answer concerning certain information about logbooks, etc. In accordance with section 28(a), these two matters will be called for discussion at the close of business this evening.

The hon. member may continue.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to turn briefly to a third source of new revenues, because another source which has not been fully tapped is capital gains. Our party agreed with Carter that "a buck is a buck" and that there should be no differentiation in the tax burden on the dollar earned on the assembly line and that gained in the marketplace.

Unfortunately we were not able to convince the Liberals at Ottawa that this principle should be part of their so-called tax reform. Instead they gave us a capital gains tax which applies to only half of the capital gains, less losses.

The Ontario Conservatives, in true Tory tradition, did not support the Carter principle but instead favoured the lightest possible kind of capital gains tax when they saw that such a tax was inevitable. They suggested a flat rate of 25 per cent, something like the very inadequate US capital gains tax.

Since the federal government in effect stayed out of half of the capital gains tax field, we see no reason why the provincial government shouldn't move into this vacuum and put into effect the principle that a buck is a buck.

This means that Ontario could obtain from all net capital gains of Ontario taxpayers the same amount as both the federal and provincial governments now obtain from that source. It should be quite feasible for the federal government to collect this extra tax for us simply by doubling the capital gains figures in the income tax returns of Ontario residents.

While capital gains will not provide a great amount of revenue in the first year of the new tax system, they could be expected to build up. We estimate that in the first year of our gap-filling tax the province could expect about $75 million and at the end of five years from $275 million to $300 million.

This is based on the application of full income tax rates to net capital gains of Ontario residents. It can be argued that there are certain kinds of gains which merit even heavier taxation and justify a departure from the buck-is-a-buck theory. I refer particularly to capital gains from land speculation, where the beneficiary does little or nothing to earn his gain. Rather, the development of the community and the provision of urban services is the cause of the gain—and in our opinion such gains should go back to the community in toto, or in large degree.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the full income tax rate stops at 61.3 per cent, federally and provincially, and therefore we suggest that if the top rate for gains for land speculation were raised to 75 or 80 per cent, there would be additional revenue for the province to use to help the municipalities meet the problems of urbanization. We realize there are difficulties in defining speculative gains and for that reason I am merely throwing out this proposal for further study and have not attempted an estimate of the revenue available from this source. However, I would think it would be substantial over time.

So let me try to wrap this up, Mr. Speaker. Let me recapitulate the potential new revenues from these three sources.

First, resources taxes levied in accordance with the Kierans proposals would raise $325 million, some $300 million more than the pittance the people of Ontario now get. Second, succession duties raised on an equitable level could bring in from $115 to $140 million in new revenue beyond the $59 million expected this year. And, third, full capitals gains in the first year would net $75 million, which would rise to $275 or $300 million in the fifth year.

Now there are hundreds of millions. These measures would not only represent potential new revenue but would progressively increase it. They would build greater equity into the tax structure, presumably one of the great concerns of the provincial Treasurer.

Obviously we don't want or need to raise all of this potential at once. These new sources could be progressively taxed as meeting the needs of the province and its people were carefully planned. While we share and while we support the general criticisms of the budget made in the Liberal amendment, they are not enough. We would go further.

Therefore I move, seconded by Mr. Lewis, that the following be added to the amendment:

That his House deplores the fact that the government proposes to raise regressive taxes at the provincial level, ostensibly to relieve equally regressive taxes at the municipal level;

That this House urges the government to finance sales tax and pensioner credits and larger municipal grants from the greater revenues which come in during the year, beyond the under-estimates of the budget; and

That further needs of our people, notably a fully implemented property tax stabilization plan, a sharing of the income tax field with local governments, and a massive housing programme, should be financed through a progressive tapping of the new revenue sources in the resources, succession duties and capital gains field.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I have just now learned from a document handed to me that Statistics Canada announced today that Ontario's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in March was 3.9 per cent, so we must be doing something right.

Mr. MacDonald: A question, Mr. Speaker: Does the provincial Treasurer imply by that, that he is going to revise the 4.4 per cent average for the year?

Hon. Mr. White: I imply by this, Mr. Speaker, that this being the lowest rate in years, and by far the lowest in Canada, we must be doing something right; and I think my budget will prove that we are still doing it right.

Mr. Speaker: I am waiting for the next speaker, a motion, or some notice.

Mr. Deans moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 17th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. R. G. Hodgson in the chair.

ESTIMATES, PROVINCIAL SECRETARIAT FOR JUSTICE

On vote 1101:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Was the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) speaking previously?

Mr. Chairman: No, it was the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Bullbrook: I just want to make a few general remarks in connection with the statement that the hon. Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr) made on Friday last. I recognize that to some extent there will be some reiteration; as a result, I'll make brevity the essence of my adventure.

The problem that we face on this side of the House is that we were told about 18 months ago, as a result of the third report of the Committee on Government Productivity, that the reorganization of government itself would be an exciting enterprise and that we would see a new thrust in the development of policy in the social, the resources and in the justice fields. I have to say, notwithstanding a fraternal affection I have for the incumbent Provincial Secretary for Justice, that this really has to be about as vacuous, trite and platitudinous an exposition of responsibility in connection with justice policy as one could possibly envisage.

One thought that the opening remarks of the Provincial Secretary for Justice would be an exciting doctrine. One thought, especially one involved in the profession, that we would hear, as it has been litanized by some of my colleagues in the House, the attitude of the Provincial Secretary for Justice and his advisers in connection with federal-provincial relations; in connection with constitutional matters; and in connection with contemporary situations that involve us in the House and the people of this province and the people of other provinces and the Dominion of Canada as a whole.

We would have thought, having regard to the present situation relative to the position taken by Premier Lougheed in Alberta, that we might have aptly considered some response by the head of the Justice policy field in this province as to the constitutionality of the position taken by the Alberta government. We might have thought, with some justification, that this particular Provincial Secretary, without disclosing the confidence of his position, would have told us what would be the thrust of his government in responding to the position taken by Premier Lougheed.

I want to digress for a moment and say that in the vacuum that has been created by the Committee on Government Productivity—one of the authors of that committee being the present Deputy Provincial Secretary for Justice—is the sad personal commentary that that very Deputy Provincial Secretary for Justice is no longer with us in the active treatment, on a day to day basis, of guiding the Attorney General of this province in and out of the labyrinth of sophisticated and esoteric legislation and guiding him in the House itself. I know I am embarrassing him probably, but in my short term here I've found him to be, without reservation, probably the most astute public servant there is in assisting his minister. To see him placed in the position of almost a eunuch, as is his Provincial Secretary as far as involvement in this field is concerned I find most disenchanted.

Nothing was more attractive to me than to sit in private bills or to sit in this chamber and deal with a man of the stature of the former Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), within his provincial limitations—and I use the phrase provincial in the connotation of being a lawyer from Sault Ste. Marie—being assisted by the Deputy Attorney General at that time, to respond to our queries from time to time.

That really has to be the essence of the opposition's response to the opening statement of the Provincial Secretary for Justice. What a terrible waste of opportunity! I'm not going to reiterate. I'm not going to go over again what my colleague from Downsview (Mr. Singer) and what the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) have catalogued in connection with those opportunities.

Really, if this is forerunner of what we are going to get from the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mr. Welch), if it is a forerunner of what we are going to get from the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence), then I don't think there is any doubt that we are going to be involved in the vote that is before us now—that is a vote to reduce the estimates by the amount of the Provincial Secretary's salary. We are going to support this on—

Mr. Chairman: Order. That is not the motion.

Mr. Bullbrook: What was the motion?

Mr. Chairman: That vote 1101 to be reduced to the sum of $1.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): The salary is statutory.

Mr. Chairman: It is the whole programme.

Mr. Bullbrook: I'm sorry if I misled myself in connection with what the motion was.

Basically, the generality of my remarks continue in their validity because we must take the position that there's been no exposition on the part of this Provincial Secretary as to what his responsibility is.

If you read through these nine pages you find it very difficult to accept that the Deputy Provincial Secretary for Justice had anything to do with the composition of this document, because one would have thought that he, having been an author of that Committee on Government Productivity, would have seen to it that the potential that was envisaged by those senior public servants would have been conveyed to those of us who have been waiting with such great anticipation.

I just want to dwell on this one subject for a moment. From the time that I entered this House in 1968, we have seen Mr. Roberts' Confederation of Tomorrow conference and we've seen at least four—that I recall—federal-provincial conferences on the constitution; on the question of repatriation of the constitution.

Think of the excitement available to a Provincial Secretary for Justice to stand in his place and to exhaustively analyse the position to be taken by the Province of Ontario in connection with, not only the continuing secretariat, but what we might do as leaders in connection with the whole question of a new look at our constitution; a delineation of those federal and provincial responsibilities that we see every day as being really the middle net of a ping-pong game as to who is responsible in the fiscal fields, in social welfare fields, in the justice field, in the question of the control of our economy.

I just invite your consideration, Mr. Chairman, as to what an exciting opportunity that would have been. Instead we got pap. I think that was the word used by the member for Lakeshore; I'm not sure. Maybe that's too strong. But I regard this pap and, really, nothing has been said by the minister.

So I take it that in the estimates of the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko), we'll get into the question of the establishment of police commissions. There's no doubt the minister is coming around to the right direction in this connection. I suppose it would be less than respectful to say that we've attempted to guide in this regard. We know that there have been some public statements as to the intention of the government, but we'll go into this in greater detail in the Attorney General's estimates—we'll get into the more practical application of what the minister calls the streamlining of the court system. We'll be very interested in this.

So, in the essence of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I want to convey a great sense of disappointment to the Provincial Secretary for Justice; a great waste.

If these things have been done behind the scenes; if the responsibility of the Provincial Secretary for Justice is nothing more than a co-ordinating official between Correctional Services, Solicitor General and Attorney General—and that's all it would seem to be—then we think the whole superstructure of government as it presently exists is a terrible waste of time—but more importantly, it is a terrible waste of money.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): I would like to reply very briefly to the hon. member for Sarnia.

As he says, he has repeated, pretty well in all his remarks, what has already been said in this debate.

Mr. Bullbrook: I really didn't; no I really didn't. I said I could have.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: And I think it was said mainly last Friday, when he was here.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): He's so flamboyant.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Really, a great deal of research has gone into those remarks, but at the same time I would like to deal again with the statement, which apparently is the one thing that he has read, and I will agree that it is possibly too broad and too general, and I regret that. I think, for example, I could possibly have avoided the criticism of the statement that has been made during the course of these debates, if I had taken part in the Throne Speech debate, for example, and made may of the points that have been raised during the course of the debate of this particular estimate.

But there is some sensitivity, and I don't mind admitting that, between the Provincial Secretary and the four ministers within the secretariat, as to what our respective roles are. I'm hoping that will be overcome. And that, I think, was highlighted to a certain degree in respect to the opening remarks I indicated I would be making about their respective ministries.

There was, for example, a certain amount of editing that went on as far as my opening statement was concerned, because each one of them will be making an opening statement, much more detailed than mine was, dealing with their particular ministries.

So I'm not trying, really, to make any excuse. I'm just saying that it could have been done much better than it was, but I would hope that, not only during the course of these estimates, but on very many other occasions, that the information the hon. members wanted and felt wasn't forthcoming here as far as objectives are concerned and long term policy is concerned, that this information will in fact be made available to hon. members.

Now again, the hon. member raised the question of federal-provincial relations and the constitution and the current negotiations that are going on between the Province of Alberta and the Province of Ontario. As I indicated yesterday to the hon. member for Downsview, we were asked for an opinion and we gave that opinion to the Premier (Mr. Davis) and to his parliamentary assistant.

He has that information, based on the information we had as to the reasons for the Alberta position and its plans to, for example, invoke a two-price system.

We also had the opportunity to peruse some of the existing legislation in Alberta, for example in respect to conservation of resources, upon which that government is relying to some extent in withholding gas from some of the companies with which it has contracts at the present time.

I don't want either myself or any member of the Justice policy field, in some way to affect the current negotiations and talks that are going on. I think there is some headway being made. The two premiers are talking to each other. There is still a great deal of hope and optimism that some sort of an agreement will be made. To pronounce, enforce or stand on legal rights and indicate what steps we might take vis-à-vis the constitution, we think at this time is a little premature.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I mentioned last night there were two or three matters I wanted to continue to discuss with the minister. I have endeavoured in the two topics which I have raised with the minister so far—the question of the considered view of the government with respect to the field of capital punishment and the considered view of the government with respect to the decision of the court of appeal on the questions asked under the Constitutional Questions Act relating to chequerboarding—I have endeavoured to indicate to him, and to those ministers associated with him in the Provincial Secretariat for Justice, the kinds of topics which I believe are conceptual ones and practical ones, and which at the same time fall into the category of urgent government business, and are ones in which there should be no vying for position among the ministers who are involved in the secretariat with the Provincial Secretary for Justice.

One could list any number of topics. I am going to take the liberty of listing, and not for purposes other than to list, matters which I consider to be of an urgent conceptual nature which, if carefully considered by the Provincial Secretary for Justice, would result in effective practical administrative and legislative and procedural improvements in the Province of Ontario.

The areas to which I want to refer specifically are the whole question of the field of insurance in the automobile and other casualty fields which was the subject of such a damning report by the McWilliams committee. That report was tabled in the Legislature during the course of this session, and regardless of what the insurance industry has to say, or regardless of the polite phraseology which is expressed in the McWilliams report, I would suggest to the Provincial Secretary for Justice that it constitutes a damning indictment of the insurance industry in the automobile and in the other, related, general insurance fields. It calls for the collective consideration by the government, under this Provincial Secretary for Justice and his related ministers, of the whole field of insurance with a view to developing some effective and sound policy of the government toward that industry.

It is not sufficient for us to be faced a little bit later on with a piecemeal amending statute to the Insurance Act, designed to correct a number of isolated faults. Nor is it sufficient to use it as a propaganda document for the purpose of having the insurance industry say how pleased they were that these faults were drawn to their attention, but that they were already moving a long time ago to correct them.

Anyone reading that report as an objective matter can only say—and I repeat, for the last time—that it is a document which condemns the insurance industry as it practises in the Province of Ontario. And I think it is a matter which certainly deserves the consideration by the group of ministers of which this particular minister is the first amongst the equals.

The second area into which we are about to stumble as a matter of legislative enactment of this assembly, but which is a conceptual matter—which can only be dealt with on a conceptual basis—is the whole question of what we are going to do to preserve the right of privacy of citizens of the Province of Ontario. It is just not sufficient that we should be faced with a credit reporting agencies bill, which is a vested interest bill as can be readily observed by those members of the assembly who were in the committee when we were faced with some of the higher priced law firms in the province and the constant lobbying which was done for the purpose of seeing that that bill was enacted.

The ambit of that bill, the validity of the concept behind that bill, can only be conceived in relation to the overall view of the government as a matter of justice with respect to the area of individual privacy and the protection of that area under our law.

These are not matters which require long and extended discussion and they don't require broad reference to the Law Reform Commission or other group. You can if you wish to, direct the Law Reform Commission to produce its views within a stated period of time. There is ample literature on the whole question of the right of privacy in Canadian periodical legal journals; there is ample further material in the Crowther report in the United Kingdom and in the writings in the United Kingdom; and there is ample further law in the United States in the area of privacy.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The government already has a report from Queen's University commissioned by the government.

Mr. Renwick: I simply would like to say that that concept of privacy and its ramifications in the field of legal protection is, in my judgement, one of the fundamental areas that this government has to deal with before it is dealt with in a piecemeal fashion for the purpose of the credit reporting agencies which are the prime movers behind the bill which has been before the assembly now on two occasions. The third occasion will be during this session, as I understand it from the Speech from the Throne. That is the third area which, I think, falls predominantly within the field of the Provincial Secretary for Justice.

The fourth area, which is of immense concern to me and was brought again to my attention this morning, is the concern which I express about the relationship between the Ontario Securities Commission and the financial markets in the major city in the Province of Ontario, the city of Toronto, and the Toronto Stock Exchange. Whatever improvements have been wrought within the field of securities legislation were the result of financial disasters which took place in the Province of Ontario and the result of a great deal of study.

The institution of the Securities Commission itself is now faced with a situation where it is considered by those in the financial industry downtown to be not a sophisticated instrument. It is considered to be more performing a role which tends to be not exactly one which should be done away with, but which falls more in the area of a nuisance category for the financial industry than otherwise. They look more and more to the Toronto Stock Exchange for guidance in sophisticated areas of financial transactions which, of course, are part of the heart-beat of the Province of Ontario as the centre of economic development in Canada and of the wealth of Canada.

What I am suggesting to the minister is that he has to give serious consideration to reconstituting the Ontario Securities Commission on some sort of a rotational basis which will bring into government service for stated periods of time persons who are members of, sophisticated in, and participate in, the financial market. There may very well be the need to have an adequate mix of strictly government appointees for the purpose of making certain that the government's position is clearly known. But the government must bring into the governing body of the Securities Commission, in my judgement, persons who are knowledgeable about and sophisticated in the financial markets of the city of Toronto and of the Province of Ontario.

On a rotational basis, that may very well be the way in which we can safeguard ourselves—but not by multiplicity of regulation—against financial disasters in the future. Everyone who has been around long enough knows very well that these things tend to go somewhat in cyclical patterns and that our game of paper-playing, prospectus-filing, ongoing reporting, and all of the rest of it usually ends up with us faced with a disaster which we are unable to overcome. But we can overcome it, if we insist that the sophisticated leaders of the financial community participate in the regulation of that industry in the public interest.

I simply put that across to this minister as a matter which deserves his consideration in consultation with those ministers who are associated with him, particularly the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Clement) and, of course, the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) as well. Certainly it is in the Solicitor General's area also, because the whole area of fraud prevention, fraud detection and the punishment of fraud is an area of police work in this province with which we here on this side of the House are very dissatisfied, insofar as the capacity of the police to deal with that kind of illegal activity goes.

There has been some improvement, but I am suggesting that all of the crime in the Province of Ontario is not overt. One cannot say that it doesn't exist because one doesn't know about it. The greatest threat to our society is not the overt, known crimes that occur. The greatest threat is through the intrusion into the business and financial community of fraudulent practices, poor business practices and money having its origin in the criminal society. Those are matters which I think require the minister to seriously consider the reconstitution of the Securities Commission along the lines to which I have referred.

Another conceptual area which I think the Provincial Secretary for Justice should give his attention to, along with the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps), the Solicitor General and the Attorney General, is the way in which we look at the other end of the system of the administration of justice—that is, the question of the results of the whole of the process from arrest through to conviction through to detention in the correctional institutions and the result which comes out at the other end.

I am suggesting that one of the principal ideas which the ministry could adopt would be to make use of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, particularly in the field of the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology, for the purpose of placing our emphasis on making certain that each person who is admitted to the Minister of Correctional Services' institutions is given an individual assessment in detail and in depth, for the purpose of providing that person with the upgrading of his educational qualifications and for the purpose of making certain that that person in addition receives the retraining which he is able to undertake for the purpose of entering the economic life of the society when he returns.

This would be done not with the view that one can put a person into an institution for the purpose of completing the whole of that process, but rather, so that not only during the time that he is within the institution but after he leaves he has a continuing pattern of upgrading and retraining.

Regardless of those who believe that there are innately criminal persons, a substantial number of the people who are enmeshed in minor criminal offences of one kind or another and lead a repetitive pattern of non-acceptable criminal behaviour, would benefit, if they had that kind of individual assessment and that upgrading of their educational qualifications and that retraining—through a special branch of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, or if necessary, by establishing a separate College of Applied Arts and Technology that would deal primarily in this area. It would deal not just in retraining but would be able to provide the educational upgrading, and the staff would be able to have at its service those persons who could give the individual assessment, to see if there weren't some way that those particular persons rejected by society could be brought back into a meaningful existence.

I am not one who believes that the project would be 100 per cent successful. All I am saying is that we can make a significant contribution in eliminating, if nothing else, a very substantial cost to the province of Ontario, but more importantly, of course, in providing some avenue for persons to become involved again in a meaningful way within the economic system.

I would recommend that that concept of a much closer relationship and, indeed, a special branch of the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology, be devoted to that specific area. In my judgement, it is the revolving door of the return to the labour market where there is no work, and the return to the lower socio-economic levels of the Province of Ontario that lead to the greater part of that delightful term that we apply to those who return to the institution — recidivism.

I would suggest that that is a conceptual area which this minister could very well consider with his colleagues, because they are all intimately involved in that system and how it works—from the Solicitor General to the Attorney General and the Minister of Correctional Services.

I think another area which requires very clear thinking and a very clear statement by the ministry—and again this does not take very long to do—concerns what does happen to a person who has been involved in the court process and been convicted, in terms of the after result of that conviction.

Let me give you an example. I had occasion to defend two young sisters, 16 and 17 years of age, who were engaged in petty shoplifting. They were members of a family who lived in my riding—a first-class family—and fell to the temptation of picking up something in one of the stores and came before the court and pleaded guilty on my advice.

What had happened to those girls of 16 and 17? First of all, they had been released on their own recognizance at the police station. They had then been given a date at which they were to attend at the Metropolitan Toronto Police headquarters for fingerprinting and photographing. They were now in the position where they were before the court and on pleading guilty they were given a conditional discharge subject to three months' probation.

I think the sentence was quite proper and I think the provincial court judge, in the way in which he spoke to those girls, reinforced the sense of concern which they had about their conduct, and I'm quite certain they'll never appear again in the court system.

At the end of the probation period of three months that conditional discharge will become something called an absolute discharge and most of the public think that that means that person has no criminal record. But of course that person does have a criminal record, because there's been a conviction in the court. He's been granted something called a conditional discharge, then an absolute discharge at the end of the probation. Then that's sealed in some kind of an envelope in somebody's depository, presumably in the office of the Solicitor General in Ottawa—I'm not certain about that—and it is still a record, but no one can have access to it except under certain circumstances in the future.

But if anyone were to ask whether or not in the court records of this province a person had been convicted, the record would not show that that person hadn't been convicted, it would show that the person had been convicted but had been granted a conditional discharge which had become absolute—which is just as damning as if there were never any such conception as the absolute discharge.

So the second thing is, I'd like to know in what way one can remove the pictures and fingerprints of those girls from the police records of the city of Toronto, apart altogether from what the courts of justice have done in the case of their conviction.

Mr. Chairman: Order please. The hon. member is dealing in detail and should be asking these questions under the Attorney General's estimates.

Mr. Renwick: No, Mr. Chairman, with great respect, I'm talking about a conceptual matter which affects the Provincial Secretary for Justice and affects the Attorney General and affects the Solicitor General, and I will be unable to be before all of them.

I don't want to go on at any great length, but I want to ask the Provincial Secretary for Justice exactly what is the net result of a conviction of young persons before the adult courts so far as their future record is concerned, and particularly whether or not we should have such persons fingerprinted and photographed, and if that appears to be necessary, what can be done in order to remove the fingerprints and the photographs from the police records?

I think it's a serious problem, because a request to the police department for whether or not a person is of record in that department has no bearing, as I understand it, on what has happened in the court system. There must, I think, be some consideration given by the Provincial Secretary for Justice to that particular area.

I have mentioned a half dozen areas. I'm quite certain that other members of the assembly could think of matters which are of concern. Those are the ones which are of principal concern to me, other than one, and I want to close my brief remarks on that note.

On this question of the reorganization of the courts, while there is very real necessity for improvement in the efficiency of the procedures and systems of the courts—which I share with a number of people who consider that lawyers aren't the best ones to devise methods of improving the efficiency of the court system—I want to ask the Provincial Secretary, along with his colleagues, to give consideration not just to the efficient movement of persons through the court system, but to substantially restructure it. The problem with the system is that the entrance into the system of persons who have been apprehended by the police in the city of Toronto is still one of the most demeaning processes that any citizen can be subjected to.

Anybody who wants to go down to the bullpen at the city hall can still see the procedure that is followed; it comes up regularly for people to comment about. I'm one of many who, over the last 30 or 40 years, have commented about this question. The men are herded into the bullpen; the women are herded into their area of the bullpen. The legal aid plan purportedly has a duty counsel in the court to assist each one of them in being introduced into the system as quickly and as expeditiously as possible—not from the point of view of that individual, but because of the number of minutes that any duty counsel can spend with any one of them.

I don't speak from any great experience, except that I do have occasion to appear in those courts and to practice in them. I have done so now for a sufficient length of time that I have some very vivid impressions—if they are not all scientifically provable—about what is happening.

The first step is to get the mass of people into the system. That's the attitude. How they get into the system does not appear to be of concern to anybody, so long as they are introduced into the system and so long as the appearance—not the reality, but the appearance—of equality continues to exist.

Now I happen to think that the family division and the criminal division of the provincial courts, and the small claims courts, are class-structured courts. The upper courts are available to some other people, and I'll leave it to those who are best able to speak for those upper courts to deal with the problems of their reorganization. But until the criminal process of the arrest and the intake of those persons into the system is improved, you are not going to improve the way in which the court system operates.

My suggestion, and my recommendation—and out of deference to the Chairman, I don't want to go into any detail; I only use it by way of illustration—is that you are going to have to slow up that original process. I think one of the ways that the government is going to have to do it is to establish a foundation to which the government will pay the funds which will enable that foundation to provide the lawyers, the law students, the law clerks and whatever the complement is, for the protection of persons who are under arrest and brought into that system without other available means of retaining individual solicitors to act for them, for the initial stages of that procedure.

Instead of the bullpen being crowded on Monday morning and going up to 21 court and 22 court and having them marshalled through, with the duty counsel playing his part to grease the machinery so that they will get distributed out into the system, the first part of that process should be to segregate the persons who are arrested from those who are criminals already convicted. This may mean, for the present time, dividing the Don Jail into parts; that is, for those who have already been convicted and those who are still presumed to be innocent.

Then we should provide adequate accommodation where persons in the employ of this foundation would be able to interview for a period of time—the kind of time that a private citizen with the resources to hire his own lawyer would have—in terms of a personal interview with that person, sufficient information with respect to the dope sheet that has been prepared about him, sufficient opportunity to consider what the alternatives are, sufficient possibilities to consider courses of remedial or punitive treatment to which he may be subjected when he comes into the court. Instead of the court sitting on Monday morning, the court sits Monday afternoon for the purpose of hearing each of these individual cases in a way which is not demeaning to the individual and is an enhancement of our conception of how justice should be dealt with.

I am suggesting that this is a proper topic for the Provincial Secretary for Justice, Mr. Chairman, because it involves the Solicitor General; it involves the Attorney General; and it involves the Minister of Correctional Services. They are all involved in a bureaucratic system which is so structured that without the kind of co-ordination which is represented by the four ministers—with the Provincial Secretary for Justice—it will not be possible to think of a reorganization of the system which will also result in a humanizing of it.

We all recognize very clearly that there is the question of the processing of persons, who are apprehended for alleged offences, through the courts. Until that initial stage of their introduction to the system is corrected, we will not have done anything to reassert in the courts of the province the kind of justice which we should be concerned about and, indeed, very much alive to.

I am quite certain that there is nothing new about what I say. I am quite certain that with the Minister of Correctional Services and the Solicitor General and the Attorney General and the Provincial Secretary for Justice, we could go down to the bullpen at the city hall on a Monday morning and we could all shake our heads about it and consider that it's not a very satisfactory method of dealing with the problem. We could also, if we looked at it objectively, say that the duty counsel does the best he can. It's a vast improvement over not having him but such counsel can't possibly deal adequately with the questions which come up in the initial stages because they are not adequately prepared. They haven't had the kind of time to spend with their clients to ask, in an orderly and effective way, the very basic questions which initially affect that person's rights. Very often the whole way in which that person is dealt with in the court is determined at the outset of the system—and the outset of the system is seriously defective at the present time.

I wanted to raise that as a proper matter for the Provincial Secretary for Justice because of its overlapping considerations affecting the other three ministers who work with him.

I will have the opportunity, perhaps, in the specific estimates not of dealing at any great length but at least exchanging views with the appropriate ministers about that kind of problem. It means an investment of some capital; a reorganization of the space available in the old city hall—using downtown Metropolitan Toronto as the principal example—and a re-thinking of the intake processes, if I can use that dreadful term, of persons through the criminal court system. The great majority of people who come in contact with the criminal law come in contact with it through the provincial court system and not through the upper court system. It is becoming more and more rare that you hear counsel in the provincial courts' criminal division electing for trial upstairs.

There are occasions and legitimate reasons but for practical purposes the great bulk of the decisions, the impact of the system and the ultimate result as far as the individual before those courts is concerned, is determined in that very small compact processing system which starts in a very degrading and demeaning atmosphere. I think that the calibre or the quality of our administration of justice fails to be answered—if one is going to give a decision about whether it's good, bad or indifferent—fails to be determined in the way in which those cases are dealt with in those courts.

I think anyone who has had any experience in those courts is not personalizing any part of the problem. I think that the provincial judges as a group try to do a good job. I think that the Crown attorneys, and the assistant Crown attorneys in the courts try to do a good job. I think the lawyers who appear in the courts try to do a good job. But the facilities which the province provides and the basic framework within which this system works is so traditional, is so entrenched, and is so ingrained in the way we think about our courts, that it is only if four ministers such as yourselves would take a cold hard objective look at what is wrong with that system that there can be any proper restructuring and reorganizing of it.

And in these days of very few dollars being available for this kind of a change of attitude, I think the kind of systemic change which I am talking about is one which can be accomplished for very few dollars and that the benefits of it to the administration of justice in the province would be immense in relation to the number of dollars which it would require to be put into effect.

Some other aspects of this, as I said, we can deal with at the time when the particular minister's estimates are specifically before us, but I wanted to mention that area. The other area that I have mentioned is one as I understand which specifically falls within the co-ordinating activities of this policy minister.

I share, in a sense, the disappointment which other members have expressed. I am, however, prepared to be patient, in the sense that from what the Provincial Secretary for Justice has said that there are problems in developing a co-ordinated consideration of concepts that require attention. Maybe next year there will be an improvement and we will see some really effective consideration being given to the group of policy concepts to which I have referred and others which I am quite certain are of equal importance.

We will vote because it is our only way of pointing out that there is a long way to go if the purposes as set out in the report No. 3 of the Committee on Government Productivity are to be realized and if this reorganization of government, given a fair trial, is to show that it has any value. And I think that the Provincial Secretary for Justice, along with his colleagues, plays a very essential role in improving the quality of the environment within which we live, where they are so very much concerned with the initiation of the whole of the process of the administration of justice from beginning to end. That is the beauty of this particular secretariat and why I have taken up this much time to deal with the matters which are of concern to me.

Mr. Chairman: We have an amendment to vote 1101.

Mr. Lewis moves that vote 1101 be reduced to the sum of $1.

The committee divided on Mr. Lewis' amendment to vote 1101 that the sum be reduced to $1, which was negatived on the following vote.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 30; the "nays" are 51.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Vote 1101 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the study of the estimates of the Justice policy secretariat.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m. the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock p.m.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Eglinton.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that there are some Boy Scouts from the 23rd troop of St. Clement's Church in the west gallery tonight. I'm sure that you and the members of the Legislature would like to welcome them here.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): There's a lot more of them up there than on the government's side.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Chairman: The estimates of the Ministry of the Solicitor General. Does the minister have a statement?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Mr. Chairman, the new Ministry of the Solicitor General has been in existence for about one year. I don't know whether or not the anniversary date has passed but a year will suffice. I should like to highlight for the members some of the activities of the ministry office.

The ministry organization is one in which the ministry is organized around the ministry office concept, a new concept within the government reorganization. Within this concept, each programme reports to a ministry office composed of a ministry executive—the minister and deputy minister, and four senior advisers of which three have already been appointed. That is, an adviser on policy development; one on planning and evaluation; one on management services; and one, on communications between the public and the ministry, yet to be appointed.

The ministry has been highlighted by a series of senior appointments. Mr. Harold Graham has succeeded Mr. Eric Hamilton Silk, QC, as commissioner of the OPP. I take this opportunity of placing on the record the appreciation of the government and the people of Ontario for Mr. Silk's almost four decades of service within the public service, starting as he did in the office of first legislative counsel, culminating in a decade as commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police during which he gave complete leadership to the rebuilding of the administrative organization, the force structure, and developed principles upon which the force has been developed and in which the members of the force and the people of Ontario can justifiably take pride.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): You forget what he did for the tendering system.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There has been a series of other senior appointments which are in the public realm now.

Mr. Elmer Bell, QC, succeeded Mr. Percy Milligan, QC, as chairman of the Ontario Police Commission. The latter also completed almost a decade of service as chairman and has returned to a lifelong career in eastern Ontario.

Dr. John Hillsdon-Smith has been appointed as first director of forensic pathology for the province;

Dr. Ross Bennett has been appointed as deputy supervising coroner;

Prof. C. G. Simmons has been appointed chairman of the Ontario Police Arbitration Commission.

Mr. Chairman, a basic concern from the very beginning of the ministry was the organization and management of policing services. I recall for you the task force on policing set up to examine the organization, administration and efficiency of policing in Ontario; to analyse present and future needs; and to study alternative approaches to meeting these needs. This task force is in full swing.

There are expanded advisory services from the Ontario Police Commission to the police forces in the province. There is a new police arbitration and bargaining system through creation of the Ontario Police Arbitration Commission.

We believe that one of the fundamental tools of immediate use for the police is police information and communication. Ontario was the first province to implement CPIC, the Canadian Police Information Centre, a central information system for effective police action; also a very necessary tool for the operation of the Bail Reform Act, parole procedures, and the like. There are now grants to regional municipalities. We have initiated grants to regional municipalities for radio communication systems co-ordinated through the Ontario Police Commission. The ministry will provide grants for a co-ordinated police radio network across the province. Two common frequency channels will be provided.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, a very basic requirement is police training. I mention the new police college at Aylmer and an experimental in-service training and development project within the Burlington police force funded by the ministry. We will introduce a special Indian recruitment programme in the OPP to attract and train native police officers.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): It's about time.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): You can't have everything.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We will expand the role of the police and the community. We are providing support for a province-wide series of seminars on police community relations sponsored by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews.

Other necessary tools relate to scientific crime analysis. The people of this province will soon enjoy the most modern forensic science laboratory in North America which is presently under construction.

We are arranging for a more effective collection of evidence through better liaison between the Centre of Forensic Sciences and police forces by the creation of laboratory liaison officers. There is the establishment of a forensic pathology branch to supervise regional pathologists across the province and to provide training of pathologists in medico-legal aspects.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to outline for you and the members the direction of our thrust in response to organized crime areas. There will be additional staff for the criminal intelligence analysis section of the Ontario Police Commission. We are stressing the OPP capacity to deal with organized crime. We will provide more financial support to joint force operations under CISO, the Criminal Intelligence Services of Ontario.

There will be formed a drug squad in the OPP deployed across the province to deal with trafficking in hard drugs. I recall for you the royal commission to inquire into the possibility of criminal activities in the building industry in Toronto.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): In Ontario, not just Toronto.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): The minister may not be aware of that.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I recall for you, Mr. Chairman, the new Coroners Act and the regulations which set out the basic duties of coroners and clarify the rights of witnesses involved in inquests.

Mr. Chairman, the formation of the ministry has created a provincial focus on law enforcement at a time of rapid social change and growing public concern over the apparent spread of crime and violence in society and the ability of police and public safety agencies to cope with this phenomenon.

These estimates reflect this government's commitment to a society characterized by law and justice.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Listening to the Solicitor General reading his prepared statement, and not being too sure what he is reading, is typical evidence of what we have come to expect from the policy field of Justice.

He is the best evidence of the mediocrity that exists in that policy field. He is reading a prepared statement there stating that the royal commission is looking into the question of organized crime in Toronto. Hasn't the Premier (Mr. Davis) told him that it has been extended to the rest of the province or to any area where there is evidence that this exists?

An hon. member: Thanks to the member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Shulman: The minister wasn't in the House that day.

Mr. Roy: Possibly the Solicitor General was not in the House that day. He talks in his statement about highlights. One thing is for sure, he is not the highlight of that ministry. It's a sorry sight to see the provincial police or the police forces of this province led by a policy field and by a minister whom I consider to have no imagination and no foresight whatsoever, Mr. Chairman.

I recall our opposition when the Solicitor

General's department was first created, not only to the portfolio of Solicitor General but to the individual who was going to lead this portfolio. I can remember an article appearing in the Toronto Star back in the month of April of 1972—which I pointed out to the minister last year—which said that the 13,000 police officers of this province were being led by what was called a law-and-order man.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Well, well, well. That has to be right. Now we know. You and the member for High Park.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): Now we have got the same situation as in Ottawa.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): It's about time the member changed parties.

Mr. Roy: When it comes to the question of organized crime we have to keep a united force to protect this province. Obviously we are not getting it from the Solicitor General's department.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Who bails who out?

Mr. Roy: Just to give you some idea how up to date you people are in that department, I was just handed the text that you were reading, by the member for High Park—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: —and, apparently your department is not aware that the commission has been extended outside Toronto as well, because what you are reading here is the royal commission to inquire into the possibility of criminal activities in the building industry in Toronto. Weren't you here in the House when we were discussing these things? Was none of your department around?

Mr. W. Newman: Where were you?

Mr. Drea: Where were you?

Mr. Roy: Where have you been? Weren't you around?

Mr. Kennedy: Is the member for High Park writing the member's speeches?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: God help us—

Mr. Good: Who's the one who started the move to extend it across Ontario?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: God help us with you leading the Ontario Provincial Police and the police departments of this area; you're not even aware of that.

Mr. Drea: Why don't you give credit to the member for High Park?

Mr. Kennedy: Sure, he is writing your speeches now.

Mr. Roy: In any event, as I was pointing out, Mr. Chairman, the police forces were to be led by a man who is a law-and-order man. We've not seen too much evidence of that if you don't even know what is going on in your own department.

The thing that's interesting—one of the highlights of your statement again—is the fact that you have created this special service called the Criminal Intelligence Service of Ontario. I can recall in the Throne Speech when they discussed the question of organized crime in the construction industry in Metro Toronto, it said that it was after extensive police investigation, and obviously you weren't even aware that there was any organized crime activity in other areas, like Ottawa. At that time I was accused of going on a witch hunt until I gave the facts to the Premier and he extended the commission. If that is the kind of service that your Criminal Intelligence Service is giving you, God help us.

The thing that is most frightening about it, Mr. Chairman, is that apparently the Criminal Intelligence Service of Ontario, according to the minister — this department, with a 28-man governing body—is made up largely of senior provincial and municipal officers and is in the business of fighting organized crime in Ontario.

I can recall the minister being questioned about this force in relation to one individual apparently being dismissed from that force. The minister at that time was quoted as saying, when he spoke about this CISO, "which will become one of the most effective groups for combating organized crime in Ontario."

First of all there is certainly no evidence of that. Secondly, when he was asked to give details of the suspension of Mr. Thurston, the hon. Mr. Yaremko was quoted as saying, "I have no control over this force. I don't have to ask anybody; they don't have to answer to anybody."

I ask the minister, since when is any police force in this province not answerable to a minister of the Crown or to the elected officials of this province? Are they answerable to you or not? Do you have any control over them?

If it's security that you're after, isn't it time that you and your cabinet colleagues asked yourselves whether a police organization is answerable to anyone in a democratic society? It should be accountable, I say to the minister, to the elected representatives. I would appreciate the minister, when he discusses this in more detail, telling us what type of controls you have over this secret service, because, first of all, we are not too impressed by the results that we have obtained from this service, if they didn't even know that any organized crime was going on elsewhere than in Metro Toronto, and secondly, about the fact that it might have been organized in other areas in the lathing industry.

I would point out to the minister as well that, back some time ago, the deputy commissioner of the RCMP testified before the Quebec crime commission that they kept a list of something like about 1,000 to 10,000 names of people in organized crime; and he said at that time that 25 per cent to 30 per cent of these individuals apparently were operating in this province. But when we on this side inquired of the deputy commissioner of the OPP, he advised us that he knew nothing of this. So I suggest that when the minister mentions in his statement that he is trying to get people involved in the investigation of organized crime, possibly he should get more information from the RCMP.

The minister went on to mention the fact that a task force has been created to look into the efficiency of the police of this province. This is something we would like to hear about from the minister as well. Who are the people on this task force? We would like to discuss some of the individuals who have been appointed to this task force.

We mentioned as well—and this has been mentioned to the minister in previous estimates—the fact that police commissions should be more public. I see some evidence of this in some areas. We mentioned to the minister our concern about the fact that judges were being appointed to police commissions, that there might well have been a conflict when you had a judge sitting on a police commission who very often was a judge sitting in a court and had police officers testifying regularly before him. In those circumstances there very well could be a clear conflict. We have seen some evidence that this might well change.

I might point out to the minister that in some areas he has appointed to these police commissions some lawyers who practise in the criminal courts. I suggest that there may well be a conflict in that area as well, when a lawyer has a practice in the criminal courts and has police officers either as witnesses or cross-examines them on a regular basis, and the same officers are being guided somewhat by this individual who sits on a police commission. I would like the minister to give us some answers in relation to this matter.

We also feel that the minister is not giving any leadership in the area of upgrading not only the Ontario Provincial Police but all the police forces of this province. Some time ago I wrote to the Ontario Provincial Police inquiring about how many individuals on the force had obtained a university degree. I think the minister will agree that as our community becomes more educated and more sophisticated, it is important that our police forces keep up. I was advised that in the Ontario Provincial Police there are apparently only seven individuals with university degrees out of the 3,000 or 4,000 officers on the police force.

Mr. Shulman: That is seven more than there were two years ago.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): I wouldn't put too much stock in a degree.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): That's a big advantage.

Mr. Roy: The Metro Toronto Police apparently have about twelve officers with university degrees. And I ask the minister, are you doing any recruiting at all in the universities for police officers? I suggest that you are not; and that's the type of thing you should be looking into, because in this day and age our police officers are dealing more and more with sophisticated crime, and on an educational level they must keep up with the society at large.

Mr. Drea: Not much hope for people like me.

Mr. Roy: I think the minister will admit that when we have only seven police officers who have university degrees out of a force of more than 3,000, it's not a very good percentage.

Next I inquired of the Ontario Provincial Police how many OPP officers had been murdered in the last year. Fortunately, as far as the Ontario Provincial Police is concerned, the rate is very low.

Another question I asked of the Ontario Provincial Police was how many times they had to use their guns or how many times they had to draw their guns. And I would point out to the minister that he should be involved in serious research into this question of the use of guns by the police or against the police. He should be conducting serious research in countries like England, where the police time and time again overwhelmingly vote not to be armed. Yet their crime rate is much lower than it is here in North America; and much lower certainly than it is in the US.

That is the type of research, I suggest to the minister, that he should be involved in. If we keep arming our police—which comes first, the chicken or the egg? Is it because the police are armed that the others are using guns against them, or is it vice versa? This is the time for imagination. This is the type of leadership that I suggest you should be giving to your police forces.

I suggest to you as well that in many areas of the province where the police officers are dealing strictly with traffic—and for the provincial police a good part of their budget is mainly traffic—is it necessary for these police officers to be armed? This is something I'd like to ask the minister.

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): Oh, come on!

Mr. Roy: Yes, I am asking the question. I am trying to educate you. In any event this is a type of research you should be involved in.

Another matter I discussed with the minister was subsequent to a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Brownridge decision. I can recall I discussed it with the minister before. You will recall that the Supreme Court ruled that an individual had the right to consult his counsel before blowing in the breathalyser machine. I would ask the minister to advise us what directives he has sent to the police.

One of the directives was—you sent me a copy of the directive—that an accused, upon his request, should be allowed reasonable opportunity to use the telephone in an attempt to retain and instruct counsel. I suggested to the minister at the time why should it be only individuals who know the law who are entitled to this right to consult counsel? When the police officers are in-involved with cases of impairment—considering that the Supreme Court of Canada said that it is a right to consult counsel before blowing into the machine—why do they not advise the accused of the rights? It is not only the accused who know the law who shall take advantage of it but all accused. If it is a right, is it not a right for everyone? The minister apparently has not done anything about this.

The second problem, obviously, with this type of warning for the accused is that you are faced with a two-hour period in which you have to take the test and you felt some concern about that. I suggested to the minister at that time that what he should be doing is getting together with the legal aid system and providing duty counsel so that if an accused requested, or was advised of his rights and wanted to consult counsel, he would have counsel available at that time.

Obviously, if you start chasing around for his counsel in the middle of the night you would be missing out on the two-hour period in which he had to blow. I advised the minister that he should be getting together with the legal aid plan, with the Law Society, in organizing a roster of counsel who would be available. If an accused called and could not reach his own counsel immediately he could call someone from the legal aid panel. Apparently nothing has been done about this. In that sense people accused in this province are not getting full benefit from the Supreme Court of Canada decision.

I would ask the minister another point that has been raised or discussed with the minister. This is that apparently the federal government has instituted a plan whereby there will be 100 summer jobs for law students with the police force. The idea of this was to get law students to work with police forces to understand how the police worked and to get some co-operation.

I recall reading some time ago that apparently the police forces in the Province of Ontario will not be taking advantage of this plan. I could be wrong but I would like the minister to advise me if that is the case.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member is completely wrong.

Mr. Roy: They are taking advantage of it? Well, some police forces have complained that apparently you were not. If I am wrong, fine. They are taking advantage of it, are they?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We initiated a programme and the federal people are coming in and participating.

Mr. Roy: You initiated a programme including students, not law students. Don't try to mislead us here. That was strictly students and this is a programme involving law students. Are you taking advantage of the federal programme? I would like to know from the minister.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The federal programme has decided to join ours.

Mr. Roy: Is the federal government giving you any money for it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes, $60,000 I believe.

Mr. Roy: That is what I like to hear, that you are taking advantage of it.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): That is why you are joining them, for the $60,000.

Mr. Roy: Another matter I discussed with the minister last year—and I have heard nothing about this at all in his comments—was that police officers under the Police Act did not have the rights that ordinary individuals who were charged with any other offence had. The result is that if police officers don't have the same rights when they have problems as other individuals, how do you expect them to respect the rights of the accused?

One of the great deficiencies in the Police Act—and I have pointed this out to the minister before—is that very often the chief of a police department can act as an informer; he can investigate the charge; he can lay the charge; he can prosecute the charge—and he can be the judge as well.

I would have thought that it was a simple matter for the minister to see that there was a clear conflict; that it was not basically what has been learned under the English system of jurisprudence. There is always a conflict when you have a fellow who can lay a charge and sit as the judge; who can prosecute and sit as a judge. I pointed out to the minister the unfairness of this, and how this should be changed.

If a police officer investigates or lays a charge, surely he should not be the one to judge the charge. It would seem very basic that if he laid the charge in the first place, he must have had some grounds for thinking that the person he was laying the charge against was guilty. How could he then give an objective decision?

I have pointed this out to the minister before, but apparently there are no changes to the Police Act forthcoming.

Now, a further matter I would like to bring to the minister's attention — and I have brought this up with the police as well—is again the question of police sometimes lacking direction. As you know, the Ontario Provincial Police are able to decide on the issuing of certain licences. And one of the licences over which they have control are licences for security guards. And I have brought this to the minister's attention before that police officers should be given sort of a sense of direction. When they run into a situation like the one I will outline, they should use a bit more common sense.

An individual was convicted apparently in 1933 of a charge of theft for which he received a suspended sentence; and in 1942 was convicted for indecent assault. This individual has not committed an offence since that time, but on Dec. 5, 1972 he was refused a security guard licence for a record dating back some 30 years.

I would have thought if the police would have received this direction that I've been talking to the minister about, the police should have advised this individual that since about 1970 under the Parole Act an individual can get his record erased.

This individual has had good conduct for a period of 30 years; surely he has paid for his crime and he should not have been refused a licence just on this basis. Fortunately, we were able to correct this situation. How many other situations like this exist that we do not hear about?

Now, there is a final matter I would like to bring before the minister. I suggest to him that very often police officers are abusing their right to fingerprint individuals. Under the Identification of Criminals Act only individuals charged with indictable offences may be fingerprinted. I don't know if the minister is aware of this or not. I see sort of a puzzled look on his face. I suppose I should come to expect it from this minister.

In any event, police officers regularly take fingerprints and photographs of individuals who are charged with summary conviction offences. For instance, charges of driving while over .08 or other summary conviction offences. They are fingerprinting all these people when, in fact, they do not have a right to do so under the federal statute called the Identification of Criminals Act. I would like the minister to look into this problem so that if the police are abusing their powers, then the situation can be corrected.

Mr. Chairman, these are all matters that we should bring to the attention of the House; and all matters which are evidence, as I mentioned in my opening statement, of what I consider to be the mediocrity of the Justice ministry's police section. My God, just the fact that the minister is sitting so far away from the Premier is some evidence that he isn't wanted nearby—having the minister away over there to the right.

Mr. Lewis: That may be.

Mr. Roy: The other matter that's very interesting is seeing about four ministers doing the job that apparently Arthur Wishart was able to do all by himself.

Mr. Lewis: And better.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): And do well.

Mr. Roy: What a man he must have been.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Does the hon. member realize how close he is to the edge of everything?

Mr. Roy: That's right. And I can get at the minister pretty good right from here—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes, but he's got prospects and the minister hasn't.

Mr. Roy: I don't want to get any closer to the minister.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, it would seem that in these troubled times, in these very difficult times, it is important that the police receive a sense of direction—a sense of direction that they will not get from this minister. So, Mr. Chairman, I think it is incumbent on us that I bring an amendment before the House.

An hon. member: One dollar.

Mr. Roy: The amendment is that we cut either vote 1501, item 1—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Not at this stage.

Mr. Roy: Pardon me?

Mr. Chairman: Not at this stage.

Mr. Lewis: Why not?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I want to cut $15,000 off their estimates.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, but we're not at that stage in the discussion. That will come at a certain vote, at whichever vote you wish to reduce.

Mr. Roy: Well, I want to go on to the first item.

Mr. Chairman: We're not on 1501 at this time. We're not on that.

Mr. Roy: I just want to advise you we want to cut that down by $15,000. That's what we think of the minister.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Pretty half-hearted from the Liberal opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I want, as usual to make my remarks brief.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Except that you go over them more than once.

Mr. Lewis: Now, now, you must have been to the chiropractor's.

Mr. Renwick: I will only repeat where emphasis requires the repetition.

Mr. F. S. Miller (Muskoka): He must think a lot of emphasis is needed.

Mr. Renwick: I don't quite share the views of my friend, the member for Ottawa East, about the need of this particular ministry or the competence of the minister. I think time alone will tell about the competence of the minister and about the need for the ministry.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: How much time do you need for that?

Mr. Renwick: Well, we haven't had a Ministry of the Solicitor General for some time.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We have had this minister since the beginning of time.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Don't be so envious.

Mr. Renwick: I expressed my view at the time the ministry was established on a couple of matters which are on the record. I would like to join with the minister in expressing my appreciation to the former commissioner of the OPP for the service which he rendered to the province. I know that we were significantly critical of him in the very difficult position in which he was placed because of the particular matter which led to the royal commission. But, apart from that, there is no doubt in my mind that Commissioner Silk brought the Ontario Provincial Police into the modern age, so far as policing is required, and established for it a reputation for professionalism which will be difficult for his successor to match. At the same time, it does not at all absolve us from our necessity of making criticisms of the Ontario Provincial Police when we come to that vote.

I think my concern, Mr. Chairman, centres on the immense pressures felt within the metropolitan community in the early months of this year as the result of the killing of the two police officers and the wounding of another police officer. I think there were four deaths in a very short period of time and a serious wounding of a police officer. I share, of course, with everyone, the sympathy which anyone expresses to those who are bereaved by the loss of life of those police officers and the injury which was suffered by the other one.

But I want to make it perfectly clear that that does not extend, in my judgement, to permitting—or even, for those in responsibility, condoning—the kind of police pressure to which the community in the city of Toronto was then subjected to achieve ends, which to them may very well be legitimate but for which I think they used very illegitimate means to pressure the community into accepting. I need only draw to the attention of the minister the scare headlines which appeared in the newspapers about the statements made by Sydney Brown, the president of the police association. They were, in fact, that the police were going to shoot first and ask questions afterwards. That was one of the headline stories.

There was also the immediate declaration by the chief of police of Toronto that the inadequate radio communications had caused the death of the police officer, and there was the abject surrender by the new elected city council of the city of Toronto to that pressure for the establishment of that kind of communication network.

We had in the city of Toronto the year previously—and I didn't comment during the last session because it was too close to the time when the report was made—the unauthorized and illegal use of the mounted force at the time of the presence here of the representative of the Russian government, at the time of the disturbances which took place opposite the Science Centre on Don Mills Rd. The report was closely documented and very politely worded by Judge Vannini, but it indicated that the mounted police had no business having been led into the particular part of that disturbance at the time when they were. Lack of adequate police control or communication was again blamed for it. I happen to doubt that that's the reason why the mounted police are used. It's because of a failure of police training.

We have had this tremendous pressure on about the two-man patrol car. We have had it based on the question of cost. Yet at the same time we find an immediate authorization of the two-man patrol car by the chief of police in a limited sense immediately after the police officers were killed in the city of Toronto.

We had, in addition to that, the granting of authority to police officers to wear their weapons to and from their residences, as I understand it, again, as part of the degree of hysteria which was orchestrated and escalated by the police association and by the statements of the chief of police of the city of Toronto.

Nothing was done either by the police commission of the city of Toronto or by the city council of the city of Toronto to indicate quite clearly that there was a counter-statement to be made about the circumstances in which these pressures were generated. The point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is that so long as the police commission of the city of Metropolitan Toronto is unresponsive and does not include elected representatives of sufficient number to carry weight in the councils of that commission, there is no voice in Metropolitan Toronto to counteract that kind of police pressure.

I am a person who has much respect for and realization of the need for the public protection of persons in our society so that the streets are free of crime, so that the principles of law are adhered to and so that there is order in the society. But the only way that can be accomplished by the police is if the rules are so laid down that there is not only a recognition that there are rules governing their conduct, but that there is an appreciation by the police forces of the province of the reasons for the rules. There are vast areas of the operation of the police in the Province of Ontario, certainly in the city of Toronto, for which there is a total vacuum with respect to the rules, the extent of their meaning and the need for them.

I may say that if one looks at the Police Act and I bear the same responsibility as others on this side of the House for not having examined it with this particular aspect in mind, the Police Act of the Province of Ontario sets out in great detail the regulatory power that the Lieutenant Governor in Council is to exercise with respect to the regulation of the police within the framework of the Police Act itself, divided as it is between the municipal police forces, the Ontario Provincial Police and the police commission. The Lieutenant Governor in Council is authorized under the Police Act:

To make regulations for the government of police forces and governing the conduct, duties, suspension and dismissal of members of police forces, providing for the payment of fees and expenses of witnesses at hearings, governing the qualifications for the appointment of persons to police forces and for their promotion, establishing the ranks that shall be held by members of police forces, prescribing the minimum salary or other remuneration and allowances to be paid to members of police forces, prescribing the minimum numbers of members of police forces that shall be employed, governing lockups and providing for their inspection [and a number of other similar matters, as well as all of the incidental authority that one usually finds in a regulatory power] prescribing courses of training for members of police, prescribing or regulating the numbers of meetings to be held by boards and the times and places at which they are to be held, prescribing the records, returns, books and accounts to be kept and made by police forces or the members thereof, and respecting any matter relating to the commissioner and the Ontario Provincial Police as is considered necessary . . .

Now there is an ample grant of regulatory authority under the Police Act and I was surprised to find that for practical purposes there has been little, if any, exercise of that regulatory power. The Ontario regulations cover two or three minor areas with respect to that, but for practical purposes there has been a total abdication under the Police Act of the need to promulgate regulations which will provide for the governance of the police in the Province of Ontario.

I don't know the reason for it. I don't know why the Ontario Police Commission, having been established now for some years, hasn't seen to it that there are adequate statutory regulations passed which will promulgate and set out the rules of conduct, the courses of training, the methods of recruitment—all of the standard basic requirements that are necessary for a professionalization of the police force, in the very best sense of that term. I don't mean professionalization as an in-group within a society. I mean persons with a high respect for their professional obligations to the society in which they live.

For example, there is no statutory requirement that the police, in carrying out the very necessary part of the interrogation and questioning of citizens for the purpose of detecting and apprehending those responsible for crime, and the arresting of persons whom they believe on reasonable and probable grounds have committed that crime, there is nothing in the regulations that embodies a legal requirement that we should abide in the Province of Ontario by the judges' rules which are set out in England and which I understand are part of the course of training at the Ontario police college. There is nothing to indicate this government has said that it is the obligation of police officers in the detection and questioning of suspects with respect to crimes that those citizens upon their arrest are entitled to the protection of the judges' rules. I think it is fair to say that there is not a lawyer practising in the criminal courts in the city of Toronto who is not under the impression that there is a disregard, on a significant number of occasions, of the obligation of the police with respect to those matters.

I don't think it is any answer to say that there are some police officers who are scrupulously fair. There are officers in uniform and detectives who are scrupulously fair in the way in which they deal with and talk to, and elicit statements or questions and answers from persons who are apprehended by them and who have some appreciation of the disadvantage which a person is under when he is apprehended and taken to the police station for questioning. There is some consideration of that.

I think one of the major steps which this Solicitor General's ministry could accomplish would be to require the police forces in the Province of Ontario to abide by an Ontario version of the judges' rules with respect to the questioning of suspects and the questioning of persons after arrest. The greater part of our problem with police administration is the lack of clarity about the stages that are to be recognized in the course of questioning, detection, apprehension and charging of persons in the criminal process.

I dealt with one other aspect of it in the ongoing further stage of the criminal process in the Province of Ontario this afternoon. One of the major problems is a lack of a clear understanding of the stages of the police work.

I want to use as another example of my concern about that the very question which I mentioned earlier about the use of the mounted force for demonstration crowd-control purposes. I've said this before in the House on another occasion and I'm going to make it very clear. There are—and I have taken part in political demonstrations of one kind or another—matters to which the police are sensitive.

I'm speaking of matters such as the war in Vietnam. I'm speaking about matters such as, at one point, the grape boycott in the city. I'm speaking about matters such as the protest by Canadian citizens of Greek origin against the oppressive government in Greece. That kind of demonstration which has something in the nature of political overtones alerts the police in a way which I think requires a very skilful handling of the police force. The rules are all there but the rules are not obeyed.

In substance, what the police in Metropolitan Toronto, in face of a political demonstration of any significant size, seem to be saying, according to those who perceive it in operation, is "We will let it go on for a certain length of time and then we will disperse it."

They do not follow the carefully laid out rules of the common law and the rules which are now embodied in the Criminal Code to distinguish between a lawful assembly, the lawful assembly becoming unlawful, an unlawful assembly becoming a riot or the point at which the police can legitimately ask the citizens to disperse because of their obligation to preserve the public peace.

As long as you keep the whole thing in one process you leave it open to the kind of illegal activity which took place in front of the Ontario Science Centre. That is to put the mounted troops in.

I want anyone in the House who hasn't had the experience, to be on the sidewalk when there is a political demonstration taking place at the point in time when the police make the decision to move in with the horses. Be near the horses to find out whether or not it is not one of the most frightening experiences that a citizen could be subjected to.

I'm saying that the rules have got to be perfectly clear. The citizens have got to be made aware, by the police, of the occasion which requires a change in the action taken by the police in the course of carrying out their legitimate duties. Again, it's the lack of a clear appreciation of the steps or the stages which delimit one area from the next stage and the next stage and the next stage.

A good part of the problems with respect to political demonstrations in the city of Toronto could have been avoided if there had been a clear understanding by the police of those particular stages and steps.

Another aspect of this immense pressure in Metropolitan Toronto and throughout the province—all, as I say, part of this orchestrated and escalated operation—is with respect to the attitudes of the police toward the question of capital punishment. There is also the question of the attitude of the police toward the very necessary steps which were needed in order to correct and modernize the bail system and to eliminate its pressure on persons without money or property to put up by way of security.

The result of the lack of a sensitive police commission in Metropolitan Toronto, and the lack, if I may say so with great respect to the minister, of any countervailing statements by this minister at the time of the escalation of this pressure on the system means that in very important and sensitive areas there was so much pressure that the police administration and the police association, with the support of public opinion because of a highly inflamed situation which existed in the city, subjected the community to unwarranted pressures.

I'm not going to go on at any further length. There are a number of matters which we can deal with in the course of the various votes under the minister's estimates, but the kind of thing that I want to hear from the minister in the course of those remarks is what the attitude of his ministry is as a matter of policing, not as a matter of individual conscience, on the question of capital punishment.

I want to know what the position of the Solicitor General of the Province of Ontario is with respect to the present Bail Act as it now exists throughout Canada and the way in which it is operating in the Province of Ontario. I want to know the position of the Solicitor General on the question of whether or not police commissions should be responsible, by way of elected representatives on those commissions, to the citizenry with whose protection they are charged.

I want to know the attitude of the Solicitor General on the question of the two-man patrol cars.

I want to know the opinion of the Solicitor General on the question of whether the judges' rules should not be given some statutory force in the Province of Ontario.

I want to know whether or not it is the opinion of the Solicitor General that police officers should carry their weapons to and from their place of residence.

I would like to know the position of the Solicitor General on the question of gun control laws in the Province of Ontario, and whether or not there is not some role to be played by the provincial government in the question of the control of hand guns and the requirement that they be registered.

I want to know what the position of the Solicitor General is with respect to the role of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the city of Toronto in the intelligence work they are engaged in, in photographing persons who take part in political demonstrations.

I want to know exactly what the role is going to be of this special drug law enforcement programme which the minister has set out in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Is the minister making a note of these things?

Mr. Renwick: And I want to have some comment from the minister about the question of the royal commission which is to be looking into questions of alleged criminal activity within one area of the construction industry.

These, to my mind, are essential gut questions which we must have answered to understand what the ministry's response is as part of a programme of responsiveness to what can otherwise be an undue pressure by the association of police chiefs. My colleague, the member for Lakeshore, mentioned the other night about the association of police chiefs with the broadcasters and the way in which news perhaps is to be filtered in some form of a special interest for the police. That is another matter which has been in the press.

I happen to think there are sufficient significant factors to indicate that obviously it was most advisable to have a task force created for the purpose of looking into some of these problems. But I would also like to have some sensation of what the government's response now—not the response of the task force later on, but the kind of thinking which guides the Solicitor General as he assumes under the first vote of his ministry the overall responsibility for the co-ordination of police programmes throughout the Province of Ontario.

These are matters which are essential ingredients in the combination of, on the one hand, an adherence to the principles of law, and, on the other hand, the maintenance of the kind of public order which is required in any civilized society.

Mr. Chairman, I await with interest any comments that the minister may care to make.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I have made notes of the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa East and the member for Riverdale. Most of the items fit within one or two of the major votes and I shall undertake to the best of my ability to deal with each of these matters when the relevant vote comes up.

Mr. Roy: Does the minister admit he was wrong on this question?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1501.

The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. Roy: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Renwick: I just want to protect the vote.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1501, item 1, I would move an amendment that the amount of $250,000 be reduced by $15,000.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member got it in writing?

Mr. Roy: Pardon me?

Mr. Chairman: Has the member got it in writing?

Mr. Roy: Okay. I will put it down.

Where does it say that I have got to have it down in writing?

Mr. Chairman: I want it down here in writing.

Mr. Renwick: It becomes meaningless if we do it every bloody time.

Mr. Chairman, on that first vote under item 3 there—

Mr. Chairman: Wait till we finish with item 1—if it's the wish that we stack these things.

Mr. Lawlor: What are we waiting upon, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Lewis: I would like to point out for reasons of history, Mr. Chairman, that this is the only minister who has evoked from the opposition a wish to eliminate his salary in every ministry he has held.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I may draw to your attention it was without any success whatsoever—the opposition has struck out every time.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Might makes right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, it just shows the effect of quantity over quality, brains over brawn, of the great battalions opposite.

Mr. MacDonald: My hon. colleague means brawn over brains.

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): Brains over brawn; he is right.

Mr. Lawlor: I thought the brains were all over here.

Mr. Lewis: The Chairman is unduly formal tonight.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Roy moves that vote 1501, item 1 be reduced by $15,000.

Mr. Lewis: We'll support it under protest, because it doesn't eliminate everything the minister earns.

Mr. Chairman: Is it the wish of the members that this vote be stacked—there may be some more coming in—or do they want to vote on it? Stack it! Okay.

All right. Does anyone else wish to speak on the amendment or the motion?

Item 2.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I have a couple of questions on vote 1501. When is it anticipated that the task force will have completed its task and reported?

Mr. Chairman: That's item 3?

Mr. Renwick: Item 3 of vote 1501.

Mr. Chairman: Item 2 is carried then, I presume.

Mr. Haggerty: Nol

Mr. Chairman: Item 2. We will deal with 2 before we go to 3.

Item 2.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question on item 1. Is it the people within your main office who prepared for you the opening remarks that you made in the committee today? If it is, maybe you should question them about the fact that on page 3 they mentioned that the royal commission is to inquire into the possibility of criminal activities in the building industry in Toronto, when clearly this matter was debated at length in the House, as you will recall. I take it the minister must be aware of that.

The Throne Speech mentioned that it should be limited to Metro Toronto. Then, after a strong debate here in the House, the Premier acceded to our request that it be extended to other areas—to Ottawa, Hamilton or other areas where there is evidence of criminal activity. I would just ask the minister who prepared this statement for him?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I assume the responsibility for that statement, regardless of who was involved in its preparation. I want to assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I was present during all of the debates, the presentation by the hon. member and the response of the government. If there has been a slip in the words, I will take the responsibility. If Ottawa feels slighted that it has been overlooked in my remarks, I amend the statement to include, Mr. Chairman, the terms of reference as laid out by the Premier of Ontario.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. minister has brought to our attention in his opening remarks the appointment of the royal commission that is presently under discussion, particularly as to the ambit of its responsibility being expanded to Ottawa, did the minister have anything to do with the decision to appoint Mr. A. E. Shepherd—Q.C., I presume—to be the counsel for the royal commission? If so, does the minister recall that when we availed ourselves of Mr. Shepherd's services in the royal commission having to do with Atlantic Acceptance—

Mr. Renwick: That's the same one. Isn't that a coincidence?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —the total cost of his services as counsel for that royal commission was $130,480? That is, his personal cost for acting as counsel to the royal commission—which was in operation, as far as the estimates were concerned, over a period of two years—was $115,746 for his personal fee for services over the two years, which we presume were not full-time services, and his general expenses were $14,734.

I wonder if it would be appropriate for us to ask the minister at this time if we have any formal agreement with Mr. Shepherd, so that his services in this connection are not going to be open-ended, as far as the expense and the costs are going to be concerned?

Mr. Lewis: The member for Lakeshore will do it at half the price.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) would like to get in on that too.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I won't make any comment on that. I have too much respect for the member for Lakeshore. The minister had nothing to do with the appointment of the commission and counsel. I believe that that would be a matter for decision for the commissioner. The terms relating to the payment of the expenses of the commission would be out of the estimates of the Ministry of the Attorney General.

Mr. Haggerty: Aren't you responsible for it?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I simply raised it this time, since the minister in his opening remarks had indicated that he was accepting the responsibility for the decision.

If I might, I would just go on to another matter which, in my view, would fall under the first vote, perhaps the first item. In his opening remarks the minister indicated that the OPP is moving toward the formation of a special group of Indian officers. I would like to ask the minister for some more information about that. If he chooses to answer under another vote, that would be all right.

But, since this is a departure of some importance and basically a change in policy, could he indicate whether it's the thought that these Indian officers would have special responsibilities in those communities serving the Indian reserves or whether they would be distributed uniformly through the force? Or does he perhaps feel that it should be a special group which would be used from time to time whenever there is a special need, such as, for example the situation on the Six Nations Reserve a year and a half ago I guess, when a group on the Six Nations Reserve seized the council house, and the local detachment of the OPP found itself in a very sensitive position indeed in order to maintain order with fairness expressed on all sides. The minister no doubt recalls the situation.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the matter actually comes under vote 1505—it has to do with the OPP—but I think we can discuss it either when we deal with the Ontario Police Commission or the OPP. The recruitment programme will be dealt with through the OPP. That is where the programme is going to be, and it may be that we may get into a full discussion at that time on policing with relevance to Indians and Indian communities.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, possibly the minister could direct me if this question is related to another area of the estimates. But I would like to ask the minister a question in relation to your royal commission to inquire into the possibility of criminal activity in the construction industry. The Throne Speech clearly said that it was after extensive investigation by your law enforcement agencies that the decision was made to establish a royal commission. Am I in the right area to ask it now, or do I have to wait until we get into the OPP to discuss this?

Mr. Chairman: It comes under vote 1504.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That comes under the supervision of police forces, the OPC.

Mr. Chairman: The Ontario Police Commission and so on comes under vote 1503.

Mr. Roy: When the Throne Speech mentioned police forces, was it in fact the OPP who were doing the investigation of organized crime, or was it your special force, CISO?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It was a joint operation, Mr. Chairman, between the relevant police forces. This is not the appropriate time to discuss that.

Mr. Chairman: Votes 1503 and 1504 are more appropriate for this to come under.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask two questions so that I could know where I could raise the points? First of all—I would like to discuss it sometime and I would assume it would go through the entire range of the force—there is no doubt in my mind that in the police services, those of the OPP and of the individual services, this is one area where there has been open discrimination against women in the field. This is the first time I have raised this issue. I don't know where that question properly comes.

Mr. Chairman: I think it could very well come under 1503 or 1504.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I wonder if I might be of assistance, Mr. Chairman?

Mrs. Campbell: I wish you would, because this is a new procedure to me.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I know all members of the House would be interested in following the estimates. If you look to the summary, there's the ministry administration, then public safety, and then we have the supervision of police forces, in which the very broad questions of police in general—including the pertinent remarks of the hon. member for Riverdale—would be brought in. The Ontario Provincial Police has three votes: the administration; criminal and general law enforcement; and traffic law enforcement. So we have the public safety function, the supervision of police forces, and then the OPP. The hon. members should discuss—

Mr. Chairman: Under vote 1503 and 1504.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. members should be discussing this under vote 1503 and 1504.

Mrs. Campbell: I note in the opening statement the funds to be made available for radio communication. Where would I discuss in these estimates the possibility of funds being available through the traffic computer, as is being done in other cities on the North American continent? Is it under communications?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The matter of communications, Mr. Chairman, would come under vote 1503.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Item 2 agreed to.

Item 3, task force on policing.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, does the minister have any idea when the task force will in fact report?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I have not set a real target date for the task force. The task force has really begun to go full swing as of the beginning of the year.

I was speaking, as it happened, to the chairman today, and I know that they have commenced their hearings within the city here; they will be travelling through the province. They have terms of reference. They have a large committee which is unique in its makeup, so I have not set a target date for them.

I would hope that during the next session a report could be filed. But when the hon. members recall the breadth of the terms of reference, the job to be done, and the fact that this was actually a first—they are going to other jurisdictions to see what has been done, but to date nothing has been tackled equivalent to this—the process is very important so that really I would be looking forward to their report.

I don't like to take action in anticipation of the report. But on the other hand we can't, as the hon. members say, stand still. There are things that have to be dealt with immediately, so we will try to come up with a combination of doing the right thing while we are awaiting the report.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, it may possibly make sense, as has happened in the case of the Committee on Government Productivity and in the commission on the book publishing industry, for interim reports to be submitted on various aspects of their terms of reference. There must be some areas which can be given priority, and with such a large committee appointed and decentralized in such a way, we can begin to have the benefit of their interim reports in a series of reports, rather than to wait for one omnibus report at the end.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, one of the points that I discussed with the chairman today was that he and I will be meeting shortly after the Easter recess, and I think this is a very pertinent matter for me to take up with him to discuss the feasibility of the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: I would think that this is possibly the proper place in your estimates to take up the remarks made by myself the other day with respect to the role, function and general ranging possibilities of chiefs of police of this province, with respect to the self-discipline which they might exercise, and if they were incapable of doing so, which you might.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I don't like to interrupt the hon. member, but that would be very appropriate under—

Mr. Lawlor: You want to put that in 1503?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It would be very appropriate under that particular vote; very pertinent and very appropriate to 1503.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with the task force on policing throughout the province. I must confess I am not familiar with the complete terms of reference, but since we have an assurance from the minister that they are going to do a complete analysis of policing in the Province of Ontario, and since this minister has had responsibility for policing—I am not sure whether I have brought it to his attention; I know that I have brought it to the attention of two of his predecessors who were responsible for law enforcement in the province—I am wondering about the problem of policing the far northern reserves.

I know they make periodic trips to the far north to places like Big Trout Lake, Sandy Lake, and wherever there is a problem of that nature. I have had considerable dialogue with the minister's predecessors on coming to grips with this problem. It seems to me that in these communities that are so isolated, you have 90 per cent of the people who are good law-abiding citizens and then you have a small minority in any community that is unsupervised on an ongoing basis and that causes a good deal of problems.

I am not speaking specifically of Gull Bay; that is another matter. I am talking about areas that are accessible only by air, where we get law enforcement officers who, on a more or less routine basis, will go up maybe once a year or twice a year or more often as they are called, but by the time they get there the event is passed.

For instance, we had a particular problem at Ogoki post up on the Albany River, where it was feared that a person who had disappeared had gone through the ice during freeze-up. It was three or four months, I think, before they got a law enforcement officer in there to even investigate the matter.

I brought this up with the then Provincial Secretary for Justice, the former member for St. George, but I never did get a satisfactory explanation of why it took three or four months to get a law enforcement officer up there. Apparently there was a change in territorial responsibilities. The detachment that normally would have gone in to investigate was from Kenora or Sioux Lookout or some place in northwestern Ontario; then the responsibility for Ogoki post was changed to the Timmins region. As a result of this change in responsibility the event didn't get investigated for a period of three to four months. This seems to be typical, Mr. Chairman, of the kind of service that—

Mr. Chairman: Could we have some order for the hon. member for Thunder Bay? It's pretty hard to hear him with so much talking going on in the background.

Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: Come on you Philistines, sit down!

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): What's that?

Mr. Renwick: The Chairman said "order."

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Sorry.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, this seems to be typical of the kind of complaint that I get from far northern areas. They may go in once or twice a year, and, if the chief of the band council insists on some law enforcement presence on a far northern reserve, the crisis is passed or the culprit has fled. It seems to be a very poor way of providing law enforcement services to people in this province who feel, quite justly, that they have a right to protection from law-breakers in much the same way that we do right down here in Metropolitan Toronto.

I do appreciate there are logistical problems in getting law enforcement officers into these areas, and I had suggested a flying police force for the far north to the former Attorney General, Mr. Wishart; I think he was just about to institute it, but I suspect that some of his ministry personnel talked him out of it. I don't know why; it seemed to be a reasonable way to approach the situation. In many countries they have flying doctor services, flying nursing services, flying dental services and so on. The uses to which an aircraft is put are almost unlimited; yet in the far north they haven't taken advantage of air services to bring much needed law enforcement services to bear on culprits.

It seems to me that if the task force on policing in the Province of Ontario is going to come to grips with that problem, it will have to go up there to engage in dialogue with the band officers to document the kind of problems that all of us have been bringing to the attention of law enforcement personnel down here. Hopefully, as a result, we'll come up with some kind of a solution that will give them the kind of protection they deserve and need so badly.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the minister will give me his assurance that it will be a part of the task force's terms of reference, and that they will go up there. Don't take my word for it; go up and talk to the chiefs of band councils who have become very responsible people over the years. And I hope that you will pay heed to what they say and, in some fashion, try to come to grips with the problems that they're facing in those remote communities in northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I give the hon. member the assurance that what he has referred to will be done.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, could we know at this time what the terms of reference are for the task force? Secondly, who is the task force?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I shan't read all of the terms of reference but the important points are: An analysis and forecast of future needs; the division of policing responsibility; and financing of police services; the process of designation; police manpower planning and development; the administration of police forces, including the concept of boards of commissioners of police; the functions and role of the Ontario Police Commission; and the relationship between the police and the public.

The member will be interested in knowing that this particular task force, as I announced, was unique in its makeup because it included—and includes—all the various sectors of our community which would have an interest in the matter and input to offer. For example, from the municipal side we have Ald. William Archer, who is known to the member from the provincial-municipal liaison committee; Reeve Allan N. Masson, of the town of Oakville, also from the provincial-municipal liaison committee. We have Assistant Commissioner Erskine of the OPP, representing a provincial agency; His Honour, Judge Graham from the Ontario Police Commission, also representing a provincial government agency.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We have Mr. Picherack from TEIGA, a provincial agency; Mr. Pollock from the Ministry of the Attorney General, a provincial government agency. We have from the police side, the chief of police of Barrie, Edward A. Tschirhart; we have Mr. Syd Brown of the Police Association of Ontario; and from the public sector we have M. O. DesLauriers, he is president of the Association Canadienne-Francaise de l'Ontario. We have Mrs. Isserstedt of the city of Toronto; Miss Marua Jemmott, a lawyer from the city of Toronto, representative of the general public. We have Mr. Valorie Swain, QC, from Kingston; he probably will have been known to the member. He is a former mayor I believe. Then from northern Ontario we have Mr. Pianosi from Copper Cliff; I don't know whether that is far enough north for the hon. member.

Mr. Stokes: Copper Cliff? That's Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We have Mr. Don Pitt, a town councillor from Kenora. As it happens a vacancy has occurred and I am going to be looking to Thunder Bay, or that vicinity, for a suggestion. I find that Copper Cliff is not far enough north and Kenora may be too far north, so we have to get someone to make it a happy medium.

Mr. Stokes: I'll be happy to make a recommendation.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1501, is item 3 carried?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, if I might ask the minister a couple of questions on item 3, on the task force.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: The task force, I think, was set up close to a year ago, wasn't it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It was announced almost a year ago—the complete appointment was announced in November of last year.

Mr. Roy: Have they had no public meetings yet?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes, they have had a series of them.

Mr. Roy: Where have they had public meetings?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: They had their first one in Toronto last week, and now they are beginning to move across the province.

Mr. Roy: They have just started, then?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: They have had a whole series of internal meetings and briefings in order to acquaint all of this very broad membership with all of the facets—the members really had to become aware of all of the problems in depth. A good deal of research has been done and now they are moving on to the public hearing—and about 150 briefs have already been received.

Mr. Roy: I can see some problems in educating this group of people, because the minister seems to have an awful lot of them on this commission. Does the minister not think it is too large and somewhat unwieldy?

Or does the minister expect—let's say when he is up north—to only have people from the north sitting up there; and when he has people from another area to concentrate on people from that area? How many members are on that commission?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There are 19, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Roy: Nineteen?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko:—and size may be a bit of a logistical problem. On the other hand, if we were going to have the kind of input and the kind of participation in which everybody who had a role to play did play a role, we had to have a committee of this size.

Mr. Roy: I don't particularly agree with the minister's philosophy, because basically a task force is to get input from the public—that's where he is going to get most of his information; hopefully it's from the public when he goes to various areas of the province. The minister doesn't need 19 people.

I take it most of the input would not necessarily come from the people on the committee, but from briefs received from various associations—including Crown attorneys, police forces and that; from various officials in various areas of the province.

What I am trying to say is that the minister seems to have created a commission where he expects the input or the results of it to come from the members themselves, rather than from the public. I am suggesting to the minister that if we are going to wait—he has 19 people; he is just starting to brief now; he had the first public meeting just last week. We are going to be quite some time, possibly on the eve of the 1975 election or something, before the minister comes out with a report.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member has difficulty in recognizing the fact that it is a very complicated process. There will be participation by and input from the members directly and from hearing the views of the public and the briefs. It is a total process group.

Mrs. Campbell: Would it not occur to the minister that perhaps since he has the chief of police of Barrie and Syd Brown, and quite a large group of politicians, that it might be useful to have someone like Superintendent Fern Alexander on the task force for the kind of input she might have? As my colleague points out, the input seems to be internal in this task force.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I pointed out to the hon. member that there were two women on the task force—

Mrs. Campbell: That was not my question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am sorry, I didn't quite get the name the hon. member mentioned.

Mrs. Campbell: I believe the highest ranking female in the police force in this province is Superintendent Fern Alexander, who is at the head of the youth bureau. Surely it might occur to the powers that be that she could give something to this task force. I am not particularly asking that it be her because she's a woman, but she has the position and could give something of unique quality, it seems to me, to this task force.

An hon. member: I know her very well.

Mrs. Campbell: She may not be a Tory; I don't know that.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, we asked the various groups to put forward the names of people who would participate from that sector, and the police chiefs' association put forward the name of Chief Tschirhart, which was acceptable; and the Police Association of Ontario put forward Syd Brown, which was acceptable; and that is all we dealt with.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, something in relation to that just occurred to me. Since the minister has made mention of the fact there is a vacancy, will you consider appointing a native person to fill that vacancy?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, at the time the makeup of the committee was established, we considered all of the facets and we didn't relate any specific appointment to any particular group. We tried to get a cross representation from across the whole province in the makeup of the committee.

On the other hand, I have asked the chairman specifically that when he comes into this sector he have a very close relationship and dialogue with the native people of Ontario.

Mr. Stokes: All right! I will accept the fact that you didn't do it on the terms of any ethnic background or any nationality, but my colleague, my friend the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle), knows there are a minimum of 15,000 native people, stretching over a third of the province geographically, from the CNR mainline right through Hudson and James Bays, and they haven't got any representation. If there is any problem with regard to policing, that has got to be one of the worst. Why wouldn't you consider appointing a native person for some valuable input to your committee—

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): He is a white supremacist, that is why.

Mr. Stokes: —on a geographic basis?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, it so happens that the particular vacancy that has occurred is because one of the people from the municipal sector was unable to continue to participate, and so we will be constrained, I believe, in getting that kind of input again. There isn't a vacancy from the point of view of the public sector.

As I say, I have no hard position in this regard. The one thing I will share with the other members is that I have made it very clear to the chairman that I want to have a complete input on behalf of the natives with respect to their point of view in policing.

Mr. Stokes: Well, just add one more and make it 20.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Let me ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, we have been criticized for the size and unwieldiness—that is not my word—of the task force.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Criticized by whom?

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I'd like a point of clarification. The minister said these people have not been chosen from any group. Could he tell us then the criteria for the choice of those in the public sector?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We tried to get a package of qualifications which would be representative and reflect, as far as we could, the general population of Ontario.

Mrs. Campbell: Other than the native population.

Mr. Chairman: Item 3 carried?

Mr. Stokes: No, I want to know. I don't think it ever occurred to the minister to have somebody speaking on behalf of native people until I brought it to his attention. And just lately—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is wrong. It did occur to me.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Why didn't you do it then, if it occurred to you?

Mr. Stokes: How are you going to have a significant input into the deliberation of your committee on policing if you haven't got one native person there who even has the remotest idea of what is going on in the far northern reserves or in Indian communities? I think maybe you should have learned by the experience you have had over the past several months right in the community of Gull Bay.

It is quite obvious that after about 18 months of trouble in that community you have never come up with anything significant that would lead to the resolution of those problems. That, I think, is why you need somebody representing the Union of Ontario Indians or treaty No. 9, some presence from the Indian population to tell you what is really going on and what is needed.

You also said in your opening remarks that you were going to have a programme whereby you were going to bring native people into police forces wherever possible. If you are going to do that, if you are really serious about it, why don't you at least make a token gesture and appoint one native person to your task force?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I'm not in the habit of making token gestures.

Mr. Deans: That is exactly what you are doing now.

Mr. Stokes: You are not making any.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, it has not been possible to mirror the total population. We did it to the best of our ability within the constraints of the number of people who could serve on a task force. The hon. member for Ottawa East would probably have chosen one commissioner to oversee the evidence from his point of view.

Mr. Haggerty: You certainly have enough from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We now have a group of 19.

Mr. Roy: These are mostly from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I make the point to the hon. member that I have specifically asked and stressed to the chairman that he assure that he gets the complete input from the native sector in respect to its points of view on policing.

Mr. Haggerty: How is he going to get it?

Mr. Stokes: When I asked you specifically whether or not that will be a part of the terms of reference of the task force you said, "I make that commitment to the member," that you would go forward from this place and make that commitment and so direct them. Now you say you've already done so.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, Mr. Chairman, the itinerary of the task force does mention the north very specifically and has done so from the very beginning. I say to the hon. member I have had conversations with both the chairman and members of the task force in respect to the matter that he and I are discussing.

Mr. Stokes: Will you make available to me a copy of the itinerary, so that I'll know where they will be at any given point in time?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Oh, absolutely. We would be very happy to provide the hon. member—as a matter of fact, I will—

Mrs. Campbell: All of us.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I will see to it that whenever the task force—

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): It's like a road-show—they have an advance man.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —is in a particular community that the local member be advised. I just made that basic assumption that that would be done.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, just one matter, because the hon. minister obviously didn't get the point we were trying to bring forth. In your attempt to satisfy all segments of the Ontario community, some of which I suggest to you is a form of tokenism, you've ended up even by missing the boat, as the member has pointed out, because you have no one from the native people on that committee. I'm saying that since you have not satisfied even that basic, you'd be better off to have fewer people on the commission and it would be less unwieldy and it might be more efficient.

Mr. Chairman: Item 3 agreed to.

We'll move back to item 1. Before we ask for the vote to be carried, I have an amendment moved by Mr. Roy that vote 1501, item 1, be reduced by $1,500.

Mr. Roy: Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. Chairman: Fifteen thousand dollars, excuse me.

Mr. Roy: He's not worth it.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on the minister's salary if I may. I suppose this is what's under review at the moment and it has to do—

Mr. Chairman: The minister's salary is statutory.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, well, it will just take a moment. Statutory or not, the member for High Park as a matter of policy is asking this of every minister of this government, as we come from estimate to estimate, and I'm his deputy on this occasion to do so.

Mr. Haggerty: Where is he tonight?

Mr. Lawlor: We did so with the hon. Provincial Secretary for Justice last night.

What airplane trips at government expense have you taken recently? Has your family accompanied you? Where did you go—outside the province, inside the province? Please give us dates; we want to know. If we can't get a log officially, we'll get it one by one.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore is out of order.

Mr. Lawlor: I am not out of order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Morty didn't ask about my family.

Mr. Cassidy: He is absolutely in order.

Mr. Chairman: You are out of order.

Mr. Lawlor: It's part of the vote.

Mr. Chairman: No, it's not.

Mr. Foulds: He is absolutely in order and the question must be answered.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What do you mean it must be answered? He is not on the witness stand.

Mr. Roy: The public has the right to know.

Mr. Chairman: It has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. Lawlor: It certainly has something to do with his salary.

An hon. member: With the main office and the expenses.

Mr. Cassidy: And the activities of the minister whose salary is on this vote.

Mr. Stokes: Where would one ask that question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: I would think you would ask that in transport—main office—

Mr. Foulds: The activities of this minister?

An hon. member: You would think so, would you?

Mr. Chairman: It is not to do with the minister's salary, I can assure you of that. That is statutory. If you want to revert back to item 1, which we have a resolution on—

Mr. Lawlor: It has to do with the main office vote and I want an answer, Mr. Chairman, otherwise I'll challenge your ruling.

Mr. Chairman: Well, you can challenge my ruling but we have dealt with the main office vote except for the amendment. Now, I'm putting the amendment.

Mr. Lawlor: I'm speaking to the amendment and adumbrating a little thereon and ranging somewhat afield. If you don't mind I'd like an answer.

Mr. Renwick: Do you want to know how to vote on it?

Mr. Chairman: You're still out of order. The member for Lakeshore is out of order. We dealt with item 1 except for the amendment.

Mrs. Campbell: Challenge him.

An hon. member: Out of order.

Mr. Chairman: And we passed it, except for the amendment.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, if you want to make this difficult, you blockhead, we'll do it—if you want to be challenged. I think the minister is prepared to answer the question if you'll just let him get ahead with it.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right, yes.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): You have had your say.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I am one who abides by the rules completely. I am subject to your ruling.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, don't pay so much attention to them!

Mr. Chairman: The ruling is that we are voting on the amendment. We have heard the amendment. All in favour of the amendment please say "aye."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of—

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. If you don't know what a challenge means—

Mr. Chairman: I know what it means and I'm going to put the question if you'll just sit down for a minute! Take your seat.

Mr. Lawlor: I'm telling you.

Mr. Foulds: A little temper there.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of the Chairman's ruling, please say "aye."

All opposed say "nay."

In my opinion the "nyes" have it.

Mrs. Campbell: The "nyes" have it?

Mr. Deans: No, the "nays" have it.

Mr. Chairman: The "nyes" have it. The "ayes" have it.

An hon. member: The "ayes" have it.

Mr. Henderson: Indecision over there all the way.

Mr. Deans: You said the "nays."

Mr. Stokes: We won the vote.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: Answer the question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I said, "All in favour of the Chairman's ruling, please say "aye."

Mr. Stokes: That's right. They said "aye" and we said "nay" and you said the "nyes" have it.

Mr. Chairman: I did not.

Mr. Stokes: Yes, you did.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: You said the "nyes" have it.

Mr. Chairman: I did not. In my opinion the "ayes" have it. That's what I said.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: You can't reverse your decision.

Mr. Chairman: I didn't reverse it.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, we did believe you to say the "nays" have it. Would you take the vote again so that we can have the procedure done properly?

Mr. Chairman: No.

Mr. Deans: We believe you to have said the "nays" have it. We heard it quite distinctly. We might have been in error but we'll try it again.

Mr. Cassidy: And he ruled it out of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: You were about to stand up.

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): He said the "ayes" had it. I heard him say that.

Mr. Chairman: All right then. Nobody stood up so the ruling stands.

Mr. Foulds: What is the chairman's ruling?

Mr. Deans: What is the chairman's ruling? Would you tell us what your opinion is?

Mr. Chairman: That you're out of order and the hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lewis: Imagine ruling the hon. member for Lakeshore out of order! He has more respect for this House's rules than the Chair will ever have in your entire tenure here. You don't have that much in stature.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please, we're voting on the amendment. All in favour of Mr. Roy's motion, that vote 1501, item 1, be reduced by $15,000, will please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: Let's stand up.

Mr. Chairman: Call in the members.

Mr. Henderson: Three, six, seven Liberals over there. Let the record show that.

The committee divided on Mr. Roy's amendment to vote 1501, which was negatived on the following vote:

The Clerk Assistant: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 30, the "nays" are 49.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Vote 1501 agreed to.

On vote 1502:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale. Item 1.

Mr. Renwick: I've lost my book.

An hon. member: Sit down.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes, sit down.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: You should see what the member for Sudbury East lost.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my comment is on item 4.

Mr. Chairman: Item 4? Just before then, is there someone on item 1?

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in item 3.

Mr. Chairman: Item 3? Anyone on item 1?

Mr. Renwick: No, 3.

Mr. Roy: Item 3.

Mr. Chairman: Is item 1 carried then?

Carried.

Item 2 carried?

Carried.

Item 3.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, item 2, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Roy: Item 3.

Mr. Chairman: Two?

Mr. Roy: On item 2.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre on item 2.

Mr. Cassidy: It's Ottawa East, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Ottawa East?

Mr. Roy: Ottawa East.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It doesn't matter.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister. He mentioned in his opening remarks a new forensic centre—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: Is it in this item here that we are discussing? I would like to know—

Mr. Chairman: Could we have order in the chamber, please?

An hon. member: That's controlling them; that's controlling them.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): That is a good start; that is the way to get yourself into trouble.

An hon. member: The gavel works.

Mr. Roy: The first question I would like to ask the minister is on the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: —necessity for a new forensic centre. I thought the one we've been working with for the past years was quite adequate. What brought on the new building; the expenditures for a new forensic centre?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the present facilities down at the foot of—is it Sherbourne St?—

An hon. member: Jarvis.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —at the foot of Jarvis St. are very crowded, very inadequate; the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: Has the minister been there yet? Has he been to see it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The personnel are called upon to do very important, very painstaking work under almost impossible conditions.

Mr. Roy: Of the amount to be spent on the new centre, how much of it is capital cost?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, there is no figure for capital in these estimates; that would be in the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services. Incidentally, the building is going up presently on Grosvenor St., and if you walk along Grosvenor from Yonge to Bay, it is on the south side.

Mr. Roy: Was this a tendered contract that was awarded, or how was this handed out?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I would assume that it was the normal government procedure in respect of the construction of public buildings.

Mrs. Campbell: Proposal Proposal

Mr. Roy: What is the normal procedure? Does the minister mean proposal?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well, now that question could be directed to the Minister of Government Services during his estimates.

Mr. Roy: Well, we are voting money for this now, aren't we?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No. There are no capital expenditures.

Mr. Roy: No capital. Okay!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: This is operating expenditure.

Mr. Roy: Okay. Well, then my next question—

An hon. member: Vote on it.

Mr. Roy: Pardon?

An hon. member: Move into another area.

Mr. Roy: Yes. Well, I'll go somewhere else.

If I could ask the minister about this centre, Mr. Chairman. Can basically such a centre serve the purposes of the police when they are doing investigating work and this type of thing? Is this open to, let's say, an individual or an accused; or a law firm or a lawyer who wants to obtain some evidence—wants something analysed? Is this open to him if he requires the services of this centre, let's say, to help in his defence; or is it limited to government agencies or Crown agencies?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the users are the police, the pathologists, coroners, and the services are available to defence counsel on a purchase-of-service basis.

Mr. Roy: On a purchase-of-service basis? Does the minister mean he has to pay to—

Mr. Lawlor: That's right. Keen experts.

Mr. Roy: Well, why is that? Why, for instance, if you are defending an individual on a legal matter?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Why shouldn't he? Look at the fees he charges.

Mr. Roy: On legal aid? The member doesn't know anything about legal aid. Let's say he was defending on a legal aid matter—

An hon. member: Rip off.

Mr. Yakabuski: A licence to steal.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: Would the minister not think that if it's open to the police, it should also be open to an individual as well?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: Doesn't the member know what is going on?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: It's good to have the member for Renfrew South back.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, when I referred to defence counsel, it's not—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —the regular procedure in criminal matters; it relates to civil cases.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Defence in civil cases.

Mr. Roy: I could see some merit if you were charging in a civil case, where you are defending a client on an ordinary fee basis. But what about it in a criminal case if defence counsel requires the services of this forensic centre? Are you saying that you would charge him something?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, the services are impartial. If a defence counsel in a criminal case requests the services, they are rendered, on condition that a copy of the information also goes to the Crown attorney.

Mr. Roy: Why would it have to go to a Crown attorney?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We are maintaining an impartial basis where the centre is dedicated to producing factual scientific analysis. It doesn't take sides.

Mr. Roy: There is no obligation on the Crown to disclose its case or send a copy to defence counsel. So why should it go the other way?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: My understanding is that frequently a copy is given by the Crown.

Mr. Roy: Yes, at the discretion of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Actually, I would be very happy to look into the matter to make sure that the impartiality of the centre with respect to scientific analysis is maintained.

Mr. Roy: Just so that this point be very clear with the minister, I take it as a matter of policy, if a defence counsel in a criminal case requires the services of the centre, you are saying today in the House that it is open to him to have those services, let's say, to assist him in the defence of his case.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That's the established practice.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, under that particular heading and in continuation of that statement, that's very interesting. To what extent, for instance, does the defence counsel in criminal cases require analysis, say, of poisons or the analysis of the boring in a gun? To what extent do they turn to your forensic laboratory in order to obtain this kind of evidence, rather than going out into the private enterprise field in order to obtain this? My feeling is that that is not extensively used.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have no knowledge of the services ever being refused. Within the constraints of their capacity to deal with requests, they provide the impartial scientific analysis.

Mr. Lawlor: On the other hand, is it commonplace, therefore, for defence counsel in criminal cases to approach the forensic laboratory for detailed analysis in various areas of the criminal law? Fingerprint evidence and guns and so on?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I don't have statistics. I wouldn't think it would be common, but whenever the necessity arises the centre will respond.

Mr. Roy: I suggest to the minister, Mr. Chairman, with respect to his statement about the use by defence counsel, that this use in the past has been extremely limited, because there has been a somewhat unwritten rule on discouragement of the defence. I suggest that if you look in your statistics, maybe subsequent to the question by the member for Lakeshore, there are very, very few occasions where defence counsels have used the forensic centre. One of the reasons for it is that, first of all, it is not common knowledge that it is open to them, and it should be.

Mr. Lawlor: Certainly, they don't invite them.

Mr. Roy: Secondly, there has not been any encouragement for them to use it in a defence of their case. Basically, it's a centre that's devoted usually to Crown agencies, the police, the Crown attorney's office, and so on.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes, I don't dispute that that is the basic use of the centre. I think there are about 50 cases a year with respect to use by defence counsel. But I may say this, in a year I have not had any complaint from any defence counsel that his requests haven't been met. I don't get the hon. member's point. What is the hon. member driving at?

Mr. Roy: The point that I am driving at is that this centre operates on taxpayers' money—on public money. Especially in light of the fact that more and more criminal defences are taking place under our legal aid system, and that very often legal aid counsel in certain situations is not aware of it, I think the minister should make a point of publicizing the fact that you have a new centre, which in fact you take a lot of pride in. And I think you should take pride in it, because even in the old centre I had occasion to work with some of the people and to see their evidence. They do a good job these people. But I think it should be publicized that this is open to the public as well, to the individual and to counsel, and possibly in this fashion they would make more use of it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I would be delighted to give the hon. member an undertaking that when the ribbon is cut full publicity be given to the people of Ontario that they have the finest forensic centre on the continent available in the public interest, including those from defence counsel's side.

Mr. Roy: Will you invite the chairman of the Law Society as a sort of token gesture that this is open to the profession and to the public? I would suggest that you do that.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. member for Lakeshore have further questions?

Mr. Lawlor: I want a continuity of that. That is precisely the point. Up to now it has been a closed corporation. I would like to know the number of times that G. Arthur Martin has been in to use your facilities over against his own investigative staff and his own analysis of weapons, and his own analysis of chemicals, and his own analysis of blood, coming from an extra source to bring as expert witnesses into a court? If this is available it is excellent.

The thrust of this argument must be that you spoke and prated a little of neutrality as between opposing counsel. This opens a bonanza, this opens a new field for them. I wish it were more advertised. I wish it would become more accuracy in the profession, and if you want it to perform a function—I think it should perform a function—its staff should be available as witnesses on both sides of the fence, just as the Clarke Institute sends in a psychiatrist on both sides of the fence with relative freedom.

I have never been aware of this. I thought that the forensic clinic was your special preserve, a little island of isolation servicing the Crown, which again of course was far overreaching against the accused, who either didn't have the wherewithal or anything else. Certainly, working in conjunction with legal aid at least it can be highly beneficial. If this is the policy then it is a relatively new thing and I think you should give it some public currency.

Is that the position—complete neutrality?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Impartiality—as pure science should always be.

Mr. Lawlor: Serving both parties?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Serving both parties. During the past year about 50 defence counsel have made use of the services to my knowledge—

Mr. Lawlor: Out of thousands of cases.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko:—and to my personal knowledge I have never heard of anybody being refused. Certainly nobody has brought to my attention that they have not received service from the centre, and that answers the question.

Mr. Lawlor: One expert—one inch and you welcome the approach of defence counsel to the laboratory.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The services are there and within the capacity of the centre to give the service they will render that.

Mr. Lawlor: That is pretty weaselly.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, what is the maintenance cost of the new centre going to be compared to the old quarters? What would the cost have been had the location been a long way away—say a matter of 25 miles away—from the highest cost real estate in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Again, Mr. Chairman, we are not voting on capital expenditures.

Mr. Deacon: I am talking about maintenance costs.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Those costs are in the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, is there no accountability under the new system of checking out costs of government services for the space that these operations utilize or require? Is there no way that you have any requirement in this operation to account for the cost of space provided?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the Ministry of Government Services provides space for the various other ministries. In this instance the ministry—then the Department of the Attorney General—would have placed before the then Department of Public Works a request for space, and it was arrived at that this space would be made available.

Mr. Deacon: Well, Mr. Chairman, why was it necessary to construct this new centre on the most expensive real estate in Canada? Why could it not have been built 25 or 30 miles away from here? Why should this centre be just another place attracting more people into this already overcrowded city?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I won't go into all of the aspects of the location of the building. Certainly it's probably in the centre of the largest users. It is central to the hospital complexes in the immediate vicinity. It will provide space for the ministry offices. It's near the university for pathology training. There are logical reasons for the building to be located there. I sense the thrust of the hon. member's questioning, and the ministry is not adverse to the concept of decentralization and the dispersal of its delivery programmes wherever feasible.

Mr. Deacon: Well, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the Connaught Laboratories, for example, are a long way away from the University of Toronto, and other facilities are quite a distance away from the crowded centre of this city, why couldn't these facilities have been placed in Mississauga or some other place? Actually, they could have been a long way from here in my view. I can't see why we continue to provide all the opportunities for highly technical employment in the centre of Toronto. I would appreciate an answer, because the minister hasn't indicated any reason why it had to be right down here on Grenville St.

Mrs. Campbell: Grosvenor.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member is correct. It's Grosvenor; it backs on to Grenville.

Mrs. Campbell: It's part of the superblock.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, just one further question on this.

Under the item for the Centre of Forensic Sciences, there is $144,200 for supplies and equipment; shouldn't we be voting another $2,500 for this, since the budget handed down on Thursday will add another two per cent? I take it that it's going to cost more money for the supplies and equipment as a result of the budget. Have you taken that into account?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the province is in the unique position of being totally exempt from sales tax.

Mr. Roy: You mean that you're not paying the sales tax for your equipment and supplies, that if you buy supplies, you don't pay sales tax?

Mrs. Campbell: Or on energy.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: On vote 1502, item 4, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Well, first of all, are there other speakers on item 2?

Mr. Haggerty: Item 3.

Mrs. Campbell: I have a question. Could I ask the minister when the Centre of Forensic Sciences is going to open?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I would imagine in the next year or so. Construction is in full swing; some of the floors are already up. I don't know what the target date is.

Mrs. Campbell: The reason I'm asking is that I see the item for salaries and wages. Do I take it that this is for the present location, and therefore is not the new Centre for Forensic Sciences as it's spelled out?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: This is for the operation of the current facilities.

Mrs. Campbell: Does that include the salary of Dr. John Hillsdon-Smith, or does he not take over until the new centre is open?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He would be under item 6, forensic pathology.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you.

Item 2 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Item 3.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to direct a question to the minister. Has he had any requests to provide assistance in disaster areas resulting from the high waters of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario? I believe that the minister is responsible for emergency measures and I think the request has to go to him.

What assistance has he provided in these areas that needed help?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the emergency measures branch does not deliver—if I may use the term—hard services. It's a planning and a process agency, and any requests which are received through our branch are directed to Mr. Giles, who is the chairman of the task force which was announced by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence).

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, if I can recall, I believe emergency measures is set up for planning, that's true, but also it has a programme in case of any emergency or disaster. I am thinking in particular of the Niagara Peninsula, where they do have emergency measures set up there and where they have specialized equipment to handle any emergency. I was just wondering why you haven't acted to provide some assistance to these municipalities that have been requesting help. I am sure that there are additional funds that can be made available if you participate in that programme, or in that assistance.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the kind of hard services at the local level are provided under the aegis of the local aspect of the emergency measures branch. It would be part of the equipment that is available to that municipality through its own resources.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder, before you report, if I could just have a word. Earlier this evening the hon. member for Ottawa East made some reference to my seat and I had a sharp retort as to his location. I believe that every chair and every seat in this Legislature has equal importance.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment debate occurs, I would like to announce that tomorrow we will continue with the debate in committee of supply.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with our announcement this afternoon then, I deem a motion to adjourn to have been made, and will call the order of business as announced earlier.

In accordance with standing order 27(g), Mr. Deans had announced that he was dissatisfied with the answer given to him by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence). I now call on Mr. Deans and he has five minutes to present his arguments.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I may not require the entire five minutes.

I want to bring back to mind the matter which I have raised here this evening. On April 10, 1973, on page 725 of Hansard, I asked the minister in a supplementary question why he did not proceed immediately to make whatever is necessary available to the people on the lakefronts and the minister declined to reply in any way to that particular question.

I haven't been happy with the attitude of this government toward what has been a crisis on the lakefronts of the Province of Ontario for the last number of months. I simply charge that this government has neglected its responsibility. It seems totally incapable of dealing with a crisis in its response. Its response is simply that at some point in the obscure future, after the properties of the people have been damaged to the extent that they require repair, then and only then will the government move in with assistance.

I charge that this is not nearly adequate in this day and age. It seems that the government has a very warped view of what its responsibilities are.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): It needs an administration with imagination, vision.

Mr. Deans: I want to make it perfectly clear that there are two problems involved in this particular situation. One is an emergency problem of flooding. It can be dealt with now, and can be dealt with by this government. It doesn't require the assistance of Ottawa; they can put to work some of the 3.9 per cent seasonally adjusted unemployed in the Province of Ontario, and they can sandbag and build the kinds of dikes that will protect the properties of the people of this province from the kind of flooding that has occurred and is going to occur in the next month. I say further that this government has known since last summer that the problem that occurred only a week ago on the lakefronts was going to occur. It was brought to their attention by members of their own party and by members of this party and, I suspect, by members of the Liberal Party that there were going to be problems of flooding in the lakes of the Province of Ontario and that there had to be some action taken.

This government adamantly refused to move over the eight months from last September, when I personally first met with citizens in the Niagara Peninsula in order to try to come to grips with what they recognized was going to be an immediate problem, a problem which eventually materialized much to their discomfort and to a great extent to some financial loss to them and to the loss of their property, which most of them can ill afford. I suggest that for a very small amount of money spent prior to the flooding of a week ago, and even yet for a small amount of money to be spent right now out on the lakefronts in the most vulnerable low-lying areas to try to ensure that further flooding doesn't take place, would be money well spent by this government.

Further to that, I want to say that this government has shown over 20 years a complete lack of responsibility in dealing with the whole matter of the erosion of the lakes of Ontario. They had it brought to their attention in 1953 and a substantial report was prepared for the government by a select committee that there had been an erosion problem at that point, and that this erosion problem required considerable action by the government. The government failed to act, and I charge that they have the primary responsibility. It is their responsibility to act, because they were the ones who asked for the study, they were the ones who were warned, and they have refused to live up to their responsibilities over those 20 years. As a result of this failure, they have caused unnecessary hardship on many people of the Province of Ontario.

Further, and one final point, I want to say to the minister that it is not a matter of dealing with erosion now or not dealing with erosion now, it is a matter of dealing with erosion now or dealing with erosion later. I suggest to the government that the erosion process will continue. It will inevitably result in the reduction in the shorelines of the Province of Ontario, unless this government acts now, as it ought to have acted over the last 20 years. I suggest the first step would be the development of the kinds of groynes that can be built out into the lakes and that do cut down on the current and the wash that very much results in the erosion that we have seen in the last month or two.

Secondly, this government should undertake a programme of the building of storm breakwaters along those areas that are of public ownership in order to protect those. Further, this government should embark on a programme of loans and grants, as it does in every other sector, to allow people who do have private property along the lakefronts to build the kinds of retaining walls and breakwaters that they themselves are prepared to undertake in order to try to protect what is in fact, and will some day be in absolute law, the sole responsibility of the Province of Ontario.

I want to say that I am completely dissatisfied on behalf of the people of the Province of Ontario with this government's negative attitude and the lack of concern that it has shown.

Mr. Speaker: The minister now has five minutes to reply if he wishes.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't in the time available to me try to address myself to all the different fields of activity in which this government is involved in the long term and short term with the federal government and with the municipalities, touching on every aspect of this general tragedy. Whatever is necessary, though, does trigger a response to the extent that we have received suggestions that the unemployed be used, that the jails be emptied and that students be let out of school.

We have had a number of suggestions, but the intriguing thing is that if, as the hon. member suggests, he knew and they knew and everyone knew that there were going to be problems with flooding, I do not recall a constructive suggestion coming from the opposition in the last year. Not one.

Mr. Deans: Check with the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier). I wrote him a letter about a year ago.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: They bewail the waters! We had a whole afternoon's debate but there wasn't one constructive suggestion come from that four hours' debate.

Many of the things that the member points to, I think, are valid and we will assess them. There are questions of long-term insurance; questions of lowering taxes; questions of immediate loans; questions of getting our equipment on the ground faster. To all of these things, yes, we will respond quickly but we do not have the response to the total problem. The federal government doesn't have the response to the total problem. I would suggest that instead of weeping over the waters there be some constructive suggestions from someone in this House as to what we should do.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Get a new minister.

Mr. Lawlor: Put down some bloody sandbags. Help out.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: As a matter of fact, I don't suggest that those waters relate to either a Liberal flood or an NDP flood or a Conservative flood.

Mr. Lawlor: No, it is a neutral flood.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: It is the concern of all of us.

Mr. Deans: But the minister is the government, I cannot order the waves—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I'm not sure of that. I think the member caused some of the storm.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I think, apart from the half-dozen programmes, some of the long-term programmes and some of the intermediate programmes that we have been considering, what I personally would like this House to consider is the role of an organized, civilian authority in some way.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): We have got EMO.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: We were left with the Emergency Measures Organization, which was spawned out of the atomic bomb, and the Russians and national disaster.

Mr. Martel: That's a farce.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: On the other hand, we do not have a National Guard and we wouldn't want one. We do not have a Home Guard and I don't think we would want one. What I would hope is that out of this problem, we would have—

Mr. Martel: Change the role of the EMO.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —in a constructive sense, a debate over some sort of civilian supportive role generally in this province. To that extent I think that the suggestions of the hon. member are creative.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Nixon, the hon. Leader of the Opposition, expressed his dissatisfaction with an answer given by the Premier (Mr. Davis). The hon. Leader of the Opposition now has five minutes.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the matter that I want to raise at this time stems from the Premier's refusal, in response to my questions, to make the logbooks of government aircraft open to public inspection. His explanation that he refuses as a matter of policy is completely unacceptable and, in fact, irresponsible.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that just a few moments ago a specific question was put to the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko) asking him to tell the House whether he, as an individual minister, had used these planes. The question was ruled out of order and, although the ruling was questioned, it evidently was upheld as might have been expected.

Mr. Lawlor: We will come back to it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The point, Mr. Speaker, is that the Premier obviously has given orders that the government is to stonewall, if I may use that phrase, any possible source of information about the use of these aircraft, from whatever source it might possibly come forward.

Mr. Martel: That's sandbagging.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He must realize that the 40 or more planes in the government service are public property and the cost of their operation is entirely borne from public funds. The Provincial Auditor publicly called into question the unauthorized use of the planes in paragraph 116 of his report this year as follows:

It was noted during the conduct of this audit that the costs of some charter flights were being borne by the environmental protection branch, even though the purpose of these flights appeared not to be related to the resource protection and development programme. For example, a review of the charter flight reports indicated that a number of flights were made transporting ministers, accompanied by their families on occasion, senior civil servants and others to and from areas within and beyond the Province of Ontario.

Surely the Premier cannot insist that full information relating directly to criticism by the Provincial Auditor can be withheld from this House nor from the public accounts committee.

Such an attitude flies in the face of responsible government and the democratic process. The members of the Legislature and the people have a right to know how the government spends our money. The Premier in his refusal has abrogated the basic rights of democratic responsibility. There can be no justification for his adamant refusal, other than to assume that the misuse of the planes was flagrant and would be embarrassing to the government if it became public knowledge.

Mr. Martel: He must have something to hide.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The fact that new policy has been announced and communicated to the auditor does not discharge the Premier's total responsibility in this matter, particularly during the years 1971 and 1972. Full disclosure is absolutely mandatory under these circumstances, and I call once again for the tabling of the full record.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. House leader.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to reply to the presentation by the leader of the Liberal Party, and I would like to say that there are no unauthorized flights by government airplanes; there are none. Therefore, I want to put the record straight in regard to the auditor's report. The auditor did not state that there were unauthorized flights; the auditor mentioned in his report—and if the Leader of the Opposition had been absolutely fair he would have stated this—that the question was in regard to the accounting of those flights.

Now, we don't deny for one moment that when an airplane is requisitioned by a minister, other people may attend on those flights. We don't deny that. We don't deny that members across the way might have been on some of those flights.

Mr. Martel: But what about the Tory organizer?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: But I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I think no one should question who a minister wishes to take with him for what purpose on a certain flight or at a certain time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the Province of Ontario have an equal right to question the other parties on how their money, which is requisitioned by this Legislature, is spent in favour of the people of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: By all means. By all means.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I listened for the other five minutes, and I hope I'm given that privilege as well.

Mr. Martel: Nothing but a red herring.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: There are no red herrings.

Mr. Martel: It is a red herring.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: No, there's no point of order.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It is a very interesting observation, Mr. Speaker, that I put a statement of government policy on the record last Friday and it wasn't questioned until yesterday. As a result of that, we are having this debate here this evening.

But I want to say that the statement put out by the Leader of the Opposition last night just used beautiful political terms without stating clearly or exactly what the purpose of the Provincial Auditor's statement was—and it had nothing to do with unauthorized flights; it was totally in regard to the accounting of the entire system.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Shame on the member!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: All right. Table the report. That's the government's best and only defence. Its only defence.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It's no defence whatsoever, and I want to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't going to say this, but since there is a little ruckus over there and not a word was said by me while the leader of the Liberty Party was speaking, I want to say that I was alerted to this last fall. When I was about to attend a meeting in northern Ontario to which the entire Legislature was invited, I invited three members who I will not name to come with me. Or I suggested that because I couldn't be there on a certain date, I would fly; they all accepted, excepting when the day came they wrote me letters and said, "We are sorry, we can't go." Then I knew what they were up to; it was a political battle.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Then I knew. Then I knew.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lawlor: An advanced case of paranoia.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, everything is fine when they are playing politics but not when they want to tell the truth; then it becomes a different story.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Why not tell the truth and table the logbooks? It's the government's only defence.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Now I want to say—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in a very few days this matter will be before the public accounts committee and the members opposite will have every opportunity to put all their questions at that time. Therefore, with that knowledge, I say to you once again this might well have been somewhat of a political ploy.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: But will the minister make the information available?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Oh, I certainly am not.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I want to say one other thing—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: Ceiling zero!

Hon. Mr. Winkler: —while there are 30 seconds left.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are 30 seconds left.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I want to say one more thing, Mr. Speaker. I have never heard the Prime Minister of Canada questioned once when he uses Boeing 707s—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: —which probably on one flight would pay for every bill in the Province of Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

This order of business is completed.

An hon. member: How often do you fly in that 707?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

I deem the motion to adjourn to have been carried.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:50 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We have guests with us this afternoon: In the west gallery, students from St. Lucy's Separate School, Toronto; coming into the east gallery are the students from the Martingrove Collegiate Institute, Islington. We have special guests who will be introduced by the member for York North.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Mr. Speaker, through you to the members of this Legislature, I would like to introduce our guests in the west gallery, the Ontario Championship Pee Wee DD hockey team and their parents and supporters from the great riding of York North and the village of Schomberg.

For the championship, they beat a very fine hockey team which came from the riding of Brant, from the Six Nations Indian reserve. They are a great little hockey team and really true sports.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I want, briefly, to add my congratulations to the fine hockey players in the gallery, because they must be good if they beat the Indian team from Six Nations. There was a lot of interest locally in that series and it is a great thing to have them in the gallery today.

ESTIMATES

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, I have a message here from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By his own hand, W. R. Macdonald, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1974, and recommends them to the legislative assembly, Toronto, April 18, 1973.

Statements by the ministry.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement to make which will be in the hands of the members of the press in a few minutes.

I would like to take this opportunity to advise the House of certain further steps which the government has decided to take with respect to broadening our programmes of assistance to municipalities and to individuals afflicted by the combined high waters and storms causing erosion and shore damage along the shores of the lower Great Lakes.

Our current support programmes, as the House will recall, are capable of providing, on an 80-20 cost-sharing basis, considerable help to municipalities in relation to the building of physical works. In addition, where disaster committees are formed, compensation for damages can be arranged. We have also, through the Ministry of Agriculture and ARDA, been able to expand—and I hope with the co-operation of the federal government, to further expand—our programmes for the development of further and improved diking projects for the protection of agricultural lands.

Apart from programme assistance, Mr. Speaker, we have been able to make available to municipalities and the public, on an increasing scale, resources from within the government, primarily the ministries of Transportation and Communications and Natural Resources. During the past weeks we have also been in continuous contact with the Canada Centre for Inland Waters and with the officer of the armed forces responsible for ascertaining the role and practical capacities of the armed forces when their support is requested.

Cabinet this morning decided to take three further steps. Firstly, it authorized the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko) to request involvement of the armed forces at the moment the federal government may offer the province assistance beyond the strictures of the present EMO arrangements. It should be repeated that the Solicitor General will of course call upon the armed forces, regardless of cost, if at any time there is a threat to the lives of Ontario residents caused by the continuing situation on the lakes.

As I undertook in the House several weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, and in response to suggestions coming from a number of private citizens, I brought before my colleagues a proposal for the development of a system of loans for the purpose of making cash immediately available to shoreline property owners undertaking protective and repair works. Legislation now has been drafted and will be introduced next week providing for the granting of loans. The initial funding for this programme will amount to $1 million.

Thirdly, I should advise the House that under the direction of Mr. Walter Giles, chairman of the flood damage task force, the government has decided to test the practicability of applying the system recently concluded by the Ontario seasonal employment programme in the cutting of dead elm trees. Recruitment of labour will be co-ordinated with the welfare agencies and the Manpower offices by the district offices of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. In addition to the direct assistance in the most seriously affected flood damaged areas, there will be some relief to the local employment situation.

Another part of the programme involves providing trucks and drivers to municipalities to assist them in their efforts to erect protective works or make repairs to existing works. This equipment again will be supplied to the extent it is available from both the Ministries of Transportation and Communications and Natural Resources.

We feel that with some ingenuity, such a programme can be tested immediately, and the municipalities will be notified of the details within a few days. In order that the response will be prompt, responsibility for these two programmes will be decentralized to the district offices of both ministries, which together will be developing an effective liaison with the local municipalities.

Despite the obvious complexities involved in these decisions, Mr. Speaker, we feel that they comprise a valuable extension to current support being given to those suffering damage along our shorelines and reflect the deep concern which all the people of Ontario feel for these people.

MERCURY CONTAMINATION WARNING

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, because fish in some waters in northern Ontario, particularly in the Wabigoon and lower English River areas, have been found to contain unacceptable high amounts of mercury, the Ministry of Health is taking further action to warn those people in the areas, who may be affected, of the health hazard in eating these fish. This action, Mr. Speaker, has been taken with the co-operation and active assistance of other ministries and their personnel who have also been involved in this matter in the past.

The warning will be conveyed in the following manner: A booklet will be made available through all channels that routinely provide information on fishing in Ontario. The booklet, prepared by the Ministry of Natural Resources, will cover all lakes that have been sampled. The mercury content of fish in any given area will be provided where available on request to the local office of the Ministry of Natural Resources. Each household in and adjacent to an area known to have fish that constitute a health hazard if eaten will be sent a letter outlining the danger and suggesting equally nutritious substitutes.

Members of government staff who normally come in contact with the public will be informed of the hazard and of the information available. Information will also be made available to tourists through channels appropriate to their needs, such as health units, offices of Indian affairs, municipal offices, tourist information offices, tourist camps and purveyors of fishing licences. The fishing licence will carry an appropriate warning as well, Mr. Speaker. This programme will be carried out immediately in the Wabigoon and lower English River areas, then in other areas of the province where it is deemed necessary.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The minister ought to be ashamed. Is that all he is doing?

INDUSTRY AND TOURISM EXPLORATION TEAMS

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, today it is my pleasure to present for the information of the members of the House reports on eight out of the 10 exploration teams which were set up by the former Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. White) in March, 1972. At the moment we have received, as I say, eight out of 10 reports over the last few weeks.

The teams were composed of leaders in the business and academic fields. May I inform the House, Mr. Speaker, that they were men and women who voluntarily gave their time and talent on behalf of Ontario. For the information of the House, there were approximately 80 persons participating in the teams and 10 out of the 80 were women.

Their purpose was to provide the minister with advice under the broad terms of reference, with an emphasis on wide-ranging discussion—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): I am glad for a few gratuitous tidbits now and again.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I am glad that at least we were able to make that point with the hon. member of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): He is blushing. He is actually blushing.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: May I say that the emphasis was on wide-ranging discussions rather than on in-depth research. It was the purpose of the teams that they should not be interfered with by the bureaucracy of the civil service of this province, and that they should review ideas and suggestions that may be had been reviewed by government some time before but never put into practice. They examined a number of subjects to assist the ministry in adjusting present programmes and developing new programmes to meet the needs of industry, particularly small businesses, for the overall good of the province and its people.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that these reports to the minister are not to be considered at this time as government policy. They are now being reviewed by a special force of officials in the ministry, with input from other interested government agencies.

I would also like at this time to take this opportunity to thank the members of the teams for their considerable efforts in putting these reports together for the advancement of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism over the next few years.

RYERSON FINANCIAL PROBLEMS

Hon. J. McNie (Minister of Colleges and Universities): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement having regard to the situation at Ryerson. With your permission, I may expand somewhat on the statement as such, but I think the matter deserves it.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to report there's quiet on all fronts, but I'm afraid I can't. For those in the House who are not too well acquainted with this matter, there are a number of fronts involved, most of which at one time or another over the past few weeks have been alluded to in this House or in the press and in various public and private correspondence.

Our ministry has taken the position that the matter has been and still is one to be settled by the Ryerson community if at all possible. Notwithstanding many hard words, I honestly believe that a great deal of progress has been made.

On the financial front there are reassurances by the management that the books are open for all to view, if not always to comprehend. A comprehensive study of the administration organization will be completed shortly by a leading independent management consultant group.

On the academic side we have a non-confidence vote by the faculty protesting the way in which matters have been handled by the president recently, but not dealing with the essential conduct of the academic life of this school, which has blazed many new and worthwhile trails. With the resources available to them through current funding, there is no reason in the ministry's opinion why their "Open College" initiatives and others cannot be sustained if they accord it a high enough priority, even if station CJRT were to be lost to them. There are other ways in which the present 8½ hours of "Open College" broadcasting could readily be compensated for if necessary.

The administration and board of governors have reaffirmed that the CJRT station, notwithstanding its importance, does not enjoy a high enough priority at this juncture to warrant the expense involved in sustaining it. As a result, the government is prepared to provide interim conditional financing, as described in the following letter to Mr. Ian Kennedy, chairman of the board:

I am writing with respect to the Ryerson board of governors' decision to close down radio station CJRT June 1 due to what they regard as more pressing priorities. In the light of this decision, our ministry is prepared to make the following temporary arrangements. These arrangements will afford the government the opportunity to assess the future of CJRT in the context of a much larger review, presently under way, concerning educational broadcasting in the province.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Pretty quick results!

Hon. Mr. McNie: The conditions are as follows:

1. Funds to the amount of $75,000 will be made available to Ryerson Polytechnical Institute for the sole purpose of maintaining the operation of CJRT for a period of approximately six months.

2. The station will be operated for that period in its present manner with its current staff, unless otherwise agreed to by the ministry.

3. The ministry must be a party to any discussions, negotiations or arrangements in which the officers of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute may engage with respect to the future of the station.

4. The financial accounts of the station will be made available to the ministry during the period of funding.

5. An initial payment of $25,000 will be made at the time you indicate your acceptance of the proposal outlined above. Subsequent payments up to $75,000 will be made at appropriate intervals, so long as the ministry is convinced that the funds continue to be put to proper use.

That's the end of quote and the end of a substantial part of the letter to Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. Speaker, I have dealt briefly with the financing, administration, "Open College" and radio station aspects of this particular problem. The last matter I would like to touch on is, in my opinion, the most difficult and the most discomfoting one.

For some three weeks now there has been an occupation of the 14th floor by persons protesting the layoff of maintenance staff. It is my own opinion that these persons and their wives and children, most of whom speak little if any English, are being used by certain parties whose primary interest is not to secure gainful employment for them but rather to exploit them in the interest of discrediting and bringing down the Ryerson management. Whatever the shortcomings of the Ryerson management, these 14th-floor tactics are completely indefensible, in my opinion.

I am personally satisfied, Mr. Speaker, and I invite other members of the House to satisfy themselves likewise, that suitable alternative employment has been made available in other organizations for these unfortunate persons. I am further satisfied that representations, which I consider to be almost unprecedented in their scope, have been made to introduce these people to the prospective employers for interviews and to secure certain permanent employment in most cases at wages close to or larger than those being paid at present.

I am sorry to report, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of these unemployed persons have chosen not to follow up these leads, which is a great tragedy. At one point there were several specific listed potential opportunities for every unemployed worker. Although the lists were challenged by a few, they have subsequently proved to be essentially sound.

I might say that the community owes a debt to the many persons at Ryerson and many others in the private sector who have striven to resolve this problem under very difficult and trying circumstances. On behalf of the government and Ryerson, I want to thank the members opposite, and particularly the hon. member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), for the interest they have taken in this matter and for their forbearance.

In this statement I have chosen not to get into many side issues, important as they may be, because at this time I believe they will contribute nothing to the resolution of the basic present problems which I described the other day as essentially humanitarian. I am persuaded by the considerable information I have received that the institution does not need all the maintenance staff originally on its payroll, and I respect the autonomy of the institution to deal with this over-staffing, although I reserve the right, as members have and as the faculty has, to question the administration's handling of the matter. However, as I have stated, I am satisfied that suitable alternative employment has been made available and that other options continue to be explored by CUPE. And I would be prepared to examine this matter in full detail with the leaders of the opposition parties to reassure them also.

Just one other pertinent reference, Mr. Speaker. We invited ourselves, through the chairman of the board of governors of Ryerson, to make available our financial people to make an up-to-date analysis of the situation. They have accepted this invitation and I would hope we will be able to sit down with them very shortly and take a look at the financial situation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, in the statement which I made a few moments ago concerning the support for Great Lakes funding, in relation to the loan fund I said, and the statement reads, "$1 million," whereas it should read "$50 million."

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order before the oral questions.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, what is your point of order?

Mr. Shulman: Last night, sir, during committee of supply, members of this party asked the Solicitor General to outline what airplanes he had used in this past year and the chairman at the time ruled us out of order. I want to point out, sir, there was a precedent set the previous night. When the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr) was asked the same questions the chairman did not object, the questions were allowed and the minister replied. But for some reason it was found very necessary yesterday not to allow the Solicitor General to answer that question, sir. I suggest that the chairman erred. I ask you to look at the record and overrule him and allow us to ask that question and find out just what airplanes the Solicitor General did use last year.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order in these proceedings of the House.

Mr. W. Hodgson: The member wasn't there last night.

Mr. Speaker: A point of order in the committee must be dealt with in committee. Was that the one where the chairman's ruling was challenged? If so, that matter was settled in that way.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): The member wasn't here, was he?

Mr. Shulman: It wasn't voted on. The point of order I am making, sir—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! That matter was duly dealt with when the chairman's ruling was challenged and disposed of at that time.

Mr. Shulman: Sir, the rules of this House state that if the chairman makes an error we may appeal to the Speaker. What I am doing at the present time, sir, is I am suggesting to you the chairman made an error.

I am appealing to you to examine the ruling he made and to rule on that matter.

Mr. J. M. Jessiman (Fort William): The member never made an error, of course.

Mr. Speaker: If the chairman made an error then it undoubtedly was dealt with at the time. I am not familiar with the full circumstances, but any point of order must be dealt with in committee.

Mr. Shulman: Sir, on this point of order, I suggest to you that according to the rules of this House you are in error.

Mr. Henderson: Out of order! He wasn't there.

Mr. Shulman: If the chairman makes an error that is not dealt with in committee, we have the right to appeal to you, sir. If in doubt, may I suggest you consult with the Clerk of the House. If the chairman made an error we have a right to appeal to you.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: May I finish my point of order?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): No. The Speaker made a ruling. It is in the debate.

Mr. Shulman: The Speaker hasn't made a ruling. All I am asking you to do, sir, is examine the transcript from last night; or if you feel you do not wish to do so, ask our permanent Speaker to do so; and determine if the chairman did make an error. If he has made an error I am asking you to have this matter reviewed.

Mr. Speaker: I will certainly review the situation, but I believe my answer is correct.

Oral questions.

MERCURY CONTAMINATION WARNING

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health, following his statement regarding mercury pollution and the remedies that he is proposing for the Wabigoon and English River residents: How can he believe that a booklet pointing out the problems and risks to the local residents—almost all of them Indians—is sufficient when it is the responsibility of the government of Ontario for having permitted the original mercury losses and the methylmercury pollution which has made the Indians' primary food supply inedible, and in fact seriously dangerous? Would not the Minister of Health think that they should take one further step and provide alternative food sources during the period when it is apparent that the Indian community is not as convinced of the real dangers in continuing to eat the fish from these polluted sources?

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Does the minister want them to eat the booklet?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, I was just pointing out what I was doing as Minister of Health, and my responsibility. I wasn't referring to what other action would be taken by other ministers.

Mr. Reid: No action at all. It has been going on for three years.

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Hon. Mr. Potter: I am merely accepting my responsibility in making known to the inhabitants in that area the dangers to them of eating fish contaminated by mercury. I'm taking every step possible to make them aware in areas where they shouldn't eat any fish. In other areas where the level is of such a nature that they can eat a certain quantity of fish, either daily or once or twice a week, this will be all spelled out very clearly to them, so that they'll know the hazards.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Who is responsible for the mercury?

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Hon. Mr. Potter: I'm much in the same position as I'm in with alcohol, tobacco and other substances which are injurious to health.

Mr. Reid: There is a difference between those and starving to death.

Hon. Mr. Potter: I can point out the hazards but there is no way I can prevent people from indulging. There is no way I can stop an individual from going in there and catching the fish and eating it.

Mr. Haggerty: Stop the polluter.

Hon. Mr. Potter: But it is my responsibility to make certain that every effort is made to advise him that he shouldn't be doing it, and believe me we will do that.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary, the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Surely the minister must be aware that he is the one person whose concern in this matter must be far more than simply to point out the dangers to the Indians of eating the polluted fish. To compare that with pointing out the dangers in drinking liquor and smoking cigarettes, in my view, indicates a serious misapprehension of the problem.

Mr. Speaker: State your question.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the minister: Would he not agree that he is the one person in the cabinet who must take the primary responsibility to see that these people are provided with healthy food and not simply referred to as a group that might indulge in these polluted fish, which is their only source of food, when the minister knows perfectly well that over the years these warnings have been delivered and the Indian population chose to ignore them? Would the minister not agree that his statement is not sufficient and that he has got to take a much stronger stand in this situation?

Hon. Mr. Potter: I must further point out, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot provide food to the people in that area.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They do not indulge in food; they have got to have it.

Hon. Mr. Potter: That is not my responsibility. I have no budget to provide food.

Mr. Reid: Their health is the minister's responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Potter: My responsibility is health, not providing food.

Mr. Roy: Food is health.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur. Is this a supplementary?

Mr. Foulds: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In the minister's very limited view of his own responsibilities, and I don't for one minute grant that, given that—

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a question?

Mr. Foulds: —doesn't he feel that it is his responsibility and his ministry's responsibility to get a field person in that area, who speaks the language of the people, to go door to door to tell them of the danger?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, if this is necessary, we certainly will. I have had one of the members of my staff working on this very closely with the Indians in the area and others concerned. The proposals that I have mentioned today have been recommendations from them. If there is a need for this, certainly it will be done.

Mr. Reid: What does the minister mean? Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister can now advise me, in answer to a question I asked him some time ago, why his people did not inform the Indian people living in the English-Wabigoon area about the fact they had these high levels of mercury in their systems? Why did they wait almost two years, until March of this year, to tell them of this hazard?

The second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, is, does the minister seriously think that giving them the choice of either eating contaminated fish or starving to death is really a choice?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, in the first place, the answer to the first part of the question is that the delay was necessary because of the survey and the studies that were going on. All the people in that area had their blood samples taken and rechecked, as he is aware.

Mr. Reid: It took two years?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Again, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member realizes that while this is a staple food in the area, it is not the only food, and that some method must be devised for a substitute or even perhaps to have fish flown into the area. Here again the locals were very concerned about the possibility of having fish flown in from other areas and handed out to them. They said, "This isn't what we want. We don't want a handout." They said, "We have fished to provide food for our families. We'd be much farther ahead if we could be provided with other types of employment and then we could buy the fish if we wanted to if it was flown in."

These are areas, Mr. Speaker, which are really not within my jurisdiction to deal with but I'm sure the members will learn within a week or two from now what other steps are being taken by other ministries in this area.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have more questions?

Mr. Reid: After three years of inaction!

Mr. Speaker: This is the last supplementary. The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Had the minister's ministry or any other ministry of government considered seeking restitution from the offending companies, so that if there is any assistance to be provided to any group in the area which is affected by the high mercury levels, that restitution will be sought from the offending company?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, once again I can't speak for the other ministries in this field.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

SALES TAX ON ENERGY

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A question of the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker: Can he qualify the application of the proposed seven per cent tax on energy to the agricultural industry? Would the use of electrical energy be exempt under the provisions of his budget as announced?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Yes. As indicated in the budget statement, and shown more explicitly on page 10 of the budget highlights, on all energy being used in the production or processing of goods, the primary and secondary sector will be exempt.

To be more explicit, a fuel used to heat greenhouses will be exempted, as I indicated yesterday to my hon. friend. Electricity used for milking machines will be exempted. Natural gas used for fowling houses will be exempted. I'll be introducing the bill in an hour from now and this will be made clear.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): We should start manufacturing meters. We would make a mint.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Does this mean that the farmers will have to have separate meters on their power supplies for the various pieces of apparatus that the minister would consider to be exempt, that is as opposed to the electricity used for lighting purposes and the gas used in the farmhouse?

Mr. Bullbrook: Gosh, I didn't think of that.

Hon. Mr. White: No, sir.

Mr. Bullbrook: Will the minister supply meters?

Hon. Mr. White: We are right now obtaining data from those other jurisdictions where this tax has been in effect for a long time. For instance, in British Columbia there is a five per cent retail sales tax on all forms of energy, including domestic heating, domestic cooking, commercial heating and commercial manufacturing. We are finding out from Saskatchewan, which applies the tax to domestic electric heating and domestic electric cooking; from Manitoba which applies its retail sales tax to everything except domestic heating—

Mr. Roy: They're all NDP provinces.

Hon. Mr. White: From the Province of Quebec which applies eight per cent across the board to everything—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. White: —with a 90 per cent drawback for manufacturing only; and from Newfoundland which applies its retail sales tax of seven per cent—we are finding out how they apportion those costs. My initial report is that an arbitrary assignment of electrical power is made, for instance, of 75 cents per month for the farm household, to use the member's example.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the complexity of the decision to put the tax on power—as the minister described it in his budget—and of the problems that have been brought to the attention of the House over the last few days from members on all sides, would it not be possible for him to moderate this tax, or even more properly withdraw it—

Mr. Lewis: Withdraw it!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —before he actually brings in the legislation which, if passed—and I don't doubt that it would be passed—would in fact implement this monstrosity that has sprung full blown from the brow of the Treasurer?

Mr. Reid: A budgeting nightmare!

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I can't agree with that. I have indicated that British Columbia—

Mr. Lewis: A good thing the minister has a largish brow.

Hon. Mr. White: —to some extent Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Quebec and Newfoundland all have this tax.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What kind of justification is that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

An hon. member: I'd like to hear. I'm rather anxious to hear, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. White: As do many jurisdictions of the United States. The proceeds from this tax are being returned to our people by the new retail sales tax credit in a way that shifts the burden of this tax from the less prosperous citizens to the richer citizens.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: That's nonsense, and the Treasurer knows it is nonsense. If the proceeds are being returned why apply the tax?

A supplementary, Mr. Speaker—this budget becomes more of a nightmare for the Treasurer every day. Is he now saying to the House that he implemented a pretty sophisticated tax, like a seven per cent sales tax on energy, without any advance calculation as to its effects on various sectors of Ontario's economy?

Mr. Bullbrook: Or how to have it collected.

Mr. Lewis: What kind of a Treasurer is he?

Hon. Mr. White: I didn't say that at all.

Mr. Lewis: Well, why is he now looking at his tables?

Mr. Stokes: He is now consulting with other jurisdictions.

Hon. Mr. White: We made close estimates of our anticipated revenues and of our anticipated sales tax credits. What perhaps hasn't been made obvious to this House and to the media, although I did touch on it a couple of days ago—

Mr. Foulds: It hasn't been made obvious to the Minister.

Hon. Mr. White: —is the fact that this tax is applied in the provinces I have mentioned—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, so?

Hon. Mr. White:—and now that the budget has been released, including highly confidential material, we are able to go out in a public way and consult with certain energy companies and those jurisdictions where energy has been taxed for years.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, what does that mean?

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary, if I may, would the Treasurer advise if, prior to his budget address, he informed his cabinet colleagues, the Minister of Health and the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells), of the imposition of this tax and its effect on local boards and commissions of health and school boards—

Mr. Speaker: Order please! This is not supplementary to the original question.

Mr. Bullbrook:—and did he make a calculation—

Mr. Speaker: Order please! It may be a new question, but it's not a supplementary question at this point.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, may I suggest to you, with the greatest respect, that we are questioning in connection with the imposition of the seven per cent tax on energy sources—

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): And whether he calculated the effect.

Mr. Speaker: But it is not related to the matter of a tax on farm energy.

Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am bound to secrecy respecting cabinet deliberations; that must be evident to the hon. member—

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, he has taken it upon himself to respond, and I didn't have the opportunity of finalizing my question—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. Bullbrook: If he did—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I did not hear the minister's response. The hon. member will have his turn.

Mr. Bullbrook: He responded to my question, which you didn't permit me to finish. Now if you would permit me to finish the question—

Mr. Speaker: I'm sorry, I didn't even hear it.

Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

Mr. Bullbrook: Are you not going to permit me to—

Mr. Speaker: Not at this stage.

Mrs. Campbell: No?

Mr. Bullbrook: Then why do you permit the minister to respond?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I would put a new question to the Treasurer. Can he inform the House what consultations were taken into account by the Treasurer with his colleagues in the other departments, and even with the other representatives of his party, if not the community at large, before he made this outrageous decision to impose a seven per cent tax on energy?

Hon. Mr. White: Well Mr. Speaker, we had many meetings—I suppose almost without number—with all of the experts available to us—

Mr. Foulds: They didn't include the Minister of Health and the Minister of Education, though.

Hon. Mr. White:—during which time we explored every alternative available with respect to the proceeds from those additional revenues, the implications for our economy, the costs of administration and so on. Not having gone through the process before, I can't imagine a more intensive and searching study of the alternatives than we had this year.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker! I believe it now to be in order to ask the Treasurer if he could tell us if he effected a calculation to bring to the attention of his cabinet colleagues what the cost of the imposition of this tax would be on local hospital commissions and local school boards.

Mrs. Campbell: And municipalities.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I may or may not have told my colleagues is a matter I cannot discuss, having been sworn to secrecy.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Fortunately they are too.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I am not asking what the Treasurer told his cabinet colleagues. My question is, did he make a calculation as to what it would cost local boards of health and local school boards? Did he or did he not?

Hon. Mr. White: We made every possible calculation that we could make—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Except those.

Hon. Mr. White: —without revealing our intentions to the public, which would be a gross break with tradition and a very serious breach of ethics.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. Bullbrook: One final supplementary: Since these calculations were made, would the Treasurer therefore now inform the House how much it is going to cost throughout the province to hospital commissions and local boards of health in connection with the imposition of this tax?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, the cost to the hospital system, including mental hospitals, general hospitals, mental health clinics and such like is approximately $1 billion. The energy costs for these hospitals and clinics is a sum which would yield $700,000, on the assumption that all of this energy was taxed.

Mr. Bullbrook: For this year? What about schools? Would the Treasurer provide that figure?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, the figure for school boards is $2 million.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Are nursing homes included in that calculation?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, anything that's in the public sector would be included.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Why did the minister not consider exempting school boards and hospital boards from the tax, as he did the corporate sector?

Mrs. Campbell: And municipalities.

Mr. Lewis: Well, supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary from the member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Now that George Gathercole indirectly has described the Treasurer's proposal for individual meters as ridiculous. I am paraphrasing him—

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, I would say the member is!

Mr. Lewis: —but that was the gist of what I heard him say this morning. He said in effect it was preposterous, but he didn't want to say that to the Treasurer.

Now that he's described it in those relative terms, how is the Treasurer going to prevent landlords in Ontario from passing on the seven per cent energy tax to their tenants?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, it will be obvious that tenants will receive the benefits of the retail sales tax credit along with property owners. It will likewise be obvious the tenants fall into two categories: Those who have leases which will isolate them from this increase until the end of that lease, the cost being borne in full by the landlord.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: And those who rent properties without leases, who are subjected to rental increases if costs go up—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —or if the landlord perversely increases the rents anyway. I suppose the only protection the tenant has is to seek out a fairer rent.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Move out on the Scrooges!

Mr. Lewis: Right, so then, by way of supplementary, it is entirely possible—and in fact likely—that one of the direct effects of the seven per cent energy tax will be to have—

Mr. Speaker: Is it a question?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I've put it in a very obvious interrogative—very obvious.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A bit lengthy, but obvious.

Mr. Lewis: Lengthy, but obvious!

One of the obvious effects of the energy tax is to persuade and to encourage landlords to raise rents at this point in time, to pass it on to the tenant. And the Treasurer has no guarantee, has he, that that will be prevented?

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. Lewis: None at all, right?

Hon. Mr. White: No.

Mr. Speaker: We'll still have one more supplementary from the member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, now that the Treasurer has met with some of the area municipalities, can he tell me what the effect is on the municipalities and their budgeting as they see it?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, we are shifting $440 million more to the municipalities, including $180 million in brand new grants.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Whatever additional costs they are faced with will be a very minute percentage of those very large transfers.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I should really allow one more supplementary because the member for Ottawa East was on his feet earlier.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to ask of the Treasurer, in light of the fact that we are presently considering all the estimates of various government departments, if he would advise us how much more money we'll have to put into these estimates, considering his seven per cent sales tax—for Government Services, for instance; Correctional Services; and all these institutions, which will have to pay the seven per cent tax.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the reason the estimates were late this year is because we didn't want to forecast the budgetary changes, so there will be no additional changes as far as I know.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I think we've had enough on that subject.

Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: No.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

EFFECT OF ENERGY TAX ON EDUCATION COSTS

Mr. Lewis: Well, just one further question of the Minister of Education on this: Since school board costs have now been increased unexpectedly by $2 million, does he intend to adjust the ceilings he has placed accordingly?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): We are presently studying that and I cannot give the member an answer to that at the present time.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): That was asked yesterday.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary from the member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, is the minister considering, through the regulations, changing the weighting factors in the grants given to the local boards, particularly to those in northern Ontario, because of the extra increase in cost of heat and light in that part of the province?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, that is part of the study. I can assure the hon. member that for next year that will certainly be considered. As for this year, what we do will be studied in the next few weeks.

Mr. Roy: Well, that's all the minister can do is study.

An hon. member: No, we do more than those guys.

Mr. Roy: Give us some answers.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has a further question.

OHIP CUTS

Mr. Lewis: I have a question of the Minister of Health.

How is it that, in light of the estimates in the Social Development field, which we received on our desks just a little while ago, none of the intended or envisaged cuts in the area of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan are incorporated in the budgetary allocation?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The lid that the policy minister was talking about.

Mr. Lewis: The lid the government is putting on.

Hon. Mr. Potter: I think members will find it there. Mr. Speaker, if they make comparisons between 1971-1972 and 1972-1973, when I think the increase was 14 per cent and 1973-1974 where the increase is something like six per cent, that's a considerable difference.

Mr. Lewis: By way of further question, then, can the minister explain to me how he justifies a jump of some $28 million or better, up to $600 million now, for the Ontario Health Insurance Plan, which on a fairly rough but reasonably accurate division works out to an annual gross income of $75,000 fee-for-service per practising physician in this province? Now how is that putting the lid on medical expenditures?

Hon. Mr. Potter: These are matters, Mr. Speaker, which will be discussed, undoubtedly, when the estimates come up. If we talk about this increase in that particular item, up until the present time there has been an annual increase of five to six per cent by increased usage of the programme. We have cut that back to four per cent this year. Then there is always an increase, which is necessary due to the increase in population, which has been estimated at two per cent. So that represents a six per cent increase in the total payments.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, even calculating the expanding number of physicians, it does work out to this extraordinary gross figure. I am asking the minister how he reconciles that with the economies which he has mentioned, the Treasurer has mentioned, and the Premier (Mr. Davis) has mentioned. The Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mr. Welch) talks about putting the lid on it and implies a 15 per cent decrease in total. Instead, we have a six per cent increase, which averages out at $75,000 gross. How can we take the government's statement seriously in the Throne Speech or anywhere else?

Hon. Mr. Potter: It's pretty obvious, Mr. Speaker, that in providing our constraints we must continue to provide services. I don't think the member or anybody else is going to suggest that we discontinue services to the public that are needed. The services are going to be there, and if they are needed they are going to be provided. At the same time, ceilings are being instituted and there'll be more constraints announced very shortly.

We must face the fact that there are more people. Our population is growing every year and services are being increased every year. This doesn't represent an increase in payments to doctors at all.

Mr. Lewis: Well, of course it is. Who receives it?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have a further question?

FUNDS FOR PURCHASE OF NIAGARA ESCARPMENT

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I have a further question, Mr. Speaker, of the provincial Treasurer. Have I got the provincial Treasurer's vague attention?

Hon. Mr. White: Always.

Mr. Lewis: Okay, as long as it is there.

Does he know that his colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, yesterday told me that the moneys which were to be apportioned for the Niagara Escarpment could be found in his estimates, that is the Treasurer's estimates? Can the Treasurer tell me where, since I have perused his estimates carefully and failed to find them.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I think this should rightly be put to the Provincial Secretary. As I told the House a week ago—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: He referred them to the Treasurer and he can't find them either.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: No, I am not going to be fobbed off so easily.

Hon. Mr. White: I have got the answer, if the member will be good enough to listen. Can he stand sitting still for one minute?

The estimates include amounts for the acquisition of roadways under the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and for the acquisition of parklands under the Ministry of Natural Resources, etc. The anticipated cost of the Niagara Escarpment Commission in the present year is incorporated in those operating ministry expenditures. We do not set up a separate item on every new endeavour.

Mr. Lewis: All right! By way of supplementary: Knowing that to be true, I asked the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton) yesterday what amounts in his ministry were set aside for this matter, and he said none. So perhaps the Treasurer should talk to him.

Hon. Mr. White: Perhaps, in that event, there are no roads to be built this year in that area.

Mr. Lewis: Fine! By way of supplementary, since the Treasurer has such graphic knowledge of all the elements that go into this, the cornerpiece of the Throne Speech, land use control and the preservation of the Escarpment, which was the centrepiece of the Throne Speech, can the Treasurer tell us in round figures how much he will spend this year on rescuing the Escarpment areas, since a careful assessment of the Natural Resources estimates, the Treasurer's estimates, Resources Development estimates and Transportation and Communications estimates, show no significant increase over any previous fiscal year?

Hon. Mr. White: An exhaustive presentation to the members of the Legislature and councillors in the area affected will be made one day next month, at which time all of these answers will be known.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have further questions?

PETS IN OHC PROJECTS

Mr. Lewis: I have one last question of the Minister of Revenue, just as an incidental but one that strikes me as important. In view of the provincial Treasurer's public expression of affection for household pets as another cornerstone of his budget, is the minister going to change his policy and allow people who live in Ontario Housing Corp. projects to have domestic animals now that they don't have to pay tax on them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will go back into Hansard, when these discussions were held in the past on the subject of pets, he will find out there is no rule against pets per se in housing developments.

Mr. Lewis: They can't have them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, they can, and there are many who do have them. It depends on the circumstances. There was a change made about a year ago.

Mr. Roy: It depends on the kind of pet.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It depends on whether the pet that the person wants to keep is or is not going to be a nuisance to others who are living in the same development.

Mr. Lewis: The minister makes those judgements?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well somebody has to make judgements. We have had no complaints in the last year—and that should give the hon. member some encouragement to go out and create some.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue has the answer to a question—

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary on that question? The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Bounsall: With respect to the tenants having dogs as pets, Mr. Speaker, there is a specific situation in Windsor. A family on Lauzon Rd. has been threatened with eviction and the Catholic Service Bureau has stated quite emphatically that the removal of the nine-year-old family dog or the move of the family to a new address would adversely affect the mental and emotional health of that family, particularly the 14-year-old daughter.

Mr. Speaker: Your question is?

Mr. Bounsall: What steps is the minister taking to see that situations like this don't arise and keep arising?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, situations like that do arise and will continue to arise. We have to concern ourselves with all of the other tenants. We have about 200,000 people living in public housing projects and we have to concern ourselves with their rights and their comforts as well.

If the hon. member has a particular situation and he thinks it is worthy of a review I would be glad to look at it. I am sure if the corporation staff has made this decision it is probably based on very good grounds. If he thinks otherwise I would be glad to review it. If he will send me the information I will be glad to report back to him.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. Minister of Revenue now give the answer to the previous question please?

USE OF MARKET VALUE ASSESSMENTS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Waterloo North asked the other day if I would give him the figure of the total number of appeals against assessment in Bruce county.

I am pleased to advise the hon. member that out of the approximately 43,000 properties in Bruce county, 2,571 appeals were registered. Of that number, 187 were what is known as corrective appeals—that is, essentially clerical ones regarding ownership and land description, and so on; 83 of the appeals could be considered duplicates, being business properties with the realty under appeal. This leaves some 2,300 substantive appeals, or a rate of about five per cent, and I am advised by staff that this is a fairly reasonable figure for a reassessment.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. Good: Yes. Does the minister have any indication how many of the 2,300 appeals that will be heard the first week in May are dealing with cottage or recreational properties, and how many are dealing with permanent residences?

Mr. Roy: Next week's statement!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I'm trying to satisfy the hon. member. If I have the information I'll give it to him. The figures I have are that seasonal lands comprise 465 appeals. I really can't tell the hon. member if these will be built on or what the developers intend to do. Appeals on seasonal property on which something has been built number 507. I'm not too sure that gives the hon. member the figures, or whether they're even correct insofar as the answer to this direct question is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Treasurer has answers to two questions. Does the hon. Treasurer wish to give those answers at this time?

Mr. Roy: I have a question.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS

Hon. Mr. White: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) asked on April 16 what proportion of the $180 million directed to municipalities will be to the credit of corporate, industrial and business taxpayers to provide 43 per cent of municipal revenues.

And the answer is, as members know, the 1973 budget provides some $182 million in new funds to local government. Of that total, $105 million will benefit residential and farm taxpayers, while some $77 million will be to the credit of commercial and industrial assessment. To the extent that property taxes are reduced for businesses, half of these savings will be recouped by increased corporation income taxes.

PROBLEMS OF FARMERS IN UXBRIDGE AREA

Hon. Mr. White: I have a question here, sir, from the hon. member for Waterloo North, which reads:

Is the government contemplating action to eliminate the problems involving farmers in the Uxbridge township area who have no legal right to their land and are losing their mortgages?

The answer, I'm informed, is as follows: This situation relates directly to the stated case presented to the Ontario Court of Appeal in which questions concerning the validity of title were considered. A decision was made recently by the Ontario Court of Appeal and implications of this decision are presently under review by the law officers of the Crown. When this review is completed by the law officers of the Crown, we will be in a position to know what action, if any, is required.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa East.

ONTARIO HYDRO FARM LAND PURCHASES

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. In view of the fact that last week the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture stated that Ontario Hydro was guilty of intimidation and threats in order to get farmers' land for less than its actual value in the Arnprior area where the dam is being built, I wonder if the minister might advise whether he's familiar with the tactic; and if so, whether he would advise the officials of Hydro to cease and desist this type of action?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I don't think, Mr. Speaker, we can accept an allegation of that type as being true.

Mr. Roy: Well, has the minister looked into it? Has he looked into it at all?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No, but I'm familiar with the allegation itself. I've discussed the allegation with others, and at the moment I have no evidence there have been any high-handed tactics.

Mr. Good: Says it wasn't true, eh?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, if I might ask one supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary.

Mr. Roy: Would the minister not think it would be wise to advise the farmers of that area of the provision of the Ontario Expropriation Act and their rights under that Act?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think it can be assumed these farmers don't know the protection they have.

Mr. Roy: Oh, I see.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Treasurer and the Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs: How does the minister justify a formula of grants to the municipalities that discriminates against certain municipalities in that, for example, it allows a per capita grant to the city of Sudbury of $5 and to the region of $7, while at the same time providing grants to municipalities in southern Ontario of, for example, $10.50 in Metro Toronto, $14 in Windsor, $13 in Stratford, and $23 for the city of London?

Now would the minister not agree this is not going to equalize or bring the northern municipalities up closer to the wealthier ones in the south, but will rather widen the gap that exists between those municipalities at the present time?

Hon. Mr. White: No. On the contrary, this will be of special benefit to northern Ontario municipalities; and the fact that the member has singled out a small handful from the many that exist proves nothing. The fact of the matter is this new property tax stabilization plan is linked directly to the property tax assessment deficiency. And so all over this province the less prosperous municipalities get more than the richer municipalities.

In addition to that, we have a northern Ontario additional grant which is intended to deal with the special costs in the north country and which is intended to shift additional burdens from the ratepayers.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary.

Mr. Laughren: Is that special northern grant not included in the figures outlined in the highlights of the budget?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I expect it is.

Mr. Laughren: It certainly is.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kent.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I said we had had the last supplementary.

Mr. Martel: There was only one supplementary to the question.

Mr. Speaker: We'll allow one more from the member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Is the minister not aware that the figures my colleague quoted are arrived at by dividing the total figure in the highlights by the per capita in the municipality? This clearly indicates the discrimination in favour of the southern Ontario municipalities.

Hon. Mr. White: Did he have the grace to add in the special grants for Sudbury?

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary if I might: Does the minister not realize that is a transitional grant and after this year will be phased out? He can't use that.

Hon. Mr. White: Did my hon. friend take a look at Thunder Bay and Sault Ste. Marie and many other municipalities which benefit tremendously?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kent.

Mr. Foulds: Thunder Bay has never received any transitional and special grants and the Treasurer knows it. It has been getting the short end for three years.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! The member for Kent.

BUILDING ABOVE HIGH WATER LEVELS

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

Is it correct that there is a recent provision that no building may take place at an elevation of less than 5 ft. above the high water level in areas subject to flooding? This would mean that the village of Erieau in my riding would have to be abandoned. Has the minister any word of action or any advice to this village, to avoid the threat of the disappearance of this village?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am unfamiliar with this. Is it a bylaw of the village?

Mr. Spence: It's in the building provisions.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I am unfamiliar with it, Mr. Speaker, but I will acquaint myself with the matter because, of course, it could apply to many other municipalities.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South.

FEASIBILITY OF COPPER SMELTER IN TIMMINS

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

Will the resources development policy field further review the feasibility of a viable copper smelter in northern Ontario in the light of the apparently greater and higher grade copper ores being found in the underground operations of the Texas Gulf operation in Timmins?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Ferrier: A supplementary: Has the minister had any discussions with Texas Gulf about this matter?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I have not been involved in any—I can't speak for the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier)—nor, to my recollection, has the policy field as such had this matter before it.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

NORTH PICKERING DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Will the minister immediately carry out a survey of the condition of the properties acquired by the government in North Pickering and provide a report to this Legislature which will include the steps being taken by the government and the tenants to correct serious deterioration in those properties, and the neglect which is causing destruction of the communities?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I would be willing to take the whole matter under advisement. I think I have reported to the Legislature and to the member in particular on one or two occasions relating to the contractual relationships between the government and the parties who rent the premises or who are staying on as free tenants. I'll take the question under advisement.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East.

CONTAMINATION OF FISH IN SUDBURY AREA

Mr. Martel: Yes, a question of the Minister of Health. Has the Minister of Health received any information from his colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld), that the fish in the Sudbury area are now laden with as much as five times the normal weight of heavy metals?

Hon. Mr. Potter: No I haven't, Mr. Speaker, but I will go into it for the member.

Mr. Roy: It will give the minister a chance to print a new booklet.

Mr. Martel: In view of the preliminary studies, which indicate that such metals as lead, copper, zinc and so on are five times in excess of normal, what would the minister do with that information?

Mr. Laughren: The minnows weigh 12 lbs!

Hon. Mr. Porter: I will check that out for the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. I think Dr. James Stopps will have that information.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Huron-Bruce.

USE OF DRUGS IN SCHOOLS

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

In view of the reports of recurring incidents of use of drugs in the high schools, and even in the public schools, what is the minister doing now to correct this situation and what does he intend to do in the future about it? What plans does he have to cope with this problem?

Mr. Roy: He'll study it. He'll give the standard answer.

An hon. member: He'll appoint a task force.

Mrs. Campbell: He'll just do nothing.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That's all the members opposite ever do.

Mr. Speaker, the health education programme has a component concerned with drug education and education on the use of alcohol which, I am sure my friend is aware, is really the major number one problem today—

Mr. Reid: In schools?

Hon. Mr. Wells: In schools and elsewhere.

Mr. Reid: I didn't think it was a major problem in schools.

Hon. Mr. Wells: If one reads the reports of the Addiction Research Foundation, the number one drug problem in this country today is alcoholism. I think that we have to be aware of that; and it certainly is part of the health education programmes used in most schools across this province.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Reid: A supplementary—

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: We will allow one supplementary. The time has nearly expired; I don't think we should spend too much time on any one question.

The member for Huron-Bruce can ask one question.

Mr. Gaunt: Since the use of drugs apparently has increased since the minister started this particular programme, does he have any other programmes in mind in order to cope with this situation?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, it's that kind of irresponsible statement not based on fact, that inflames this situation.

Mr. Gaunt: It is based on fact! Let the minister tell me his facts.

Hon. Mr. Wells: If my hon. friend can somehow show that the use of drugs has increased in the past few years in schools, let him put it out on the table.

Mr. Gaunt: It has—and the minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: But read the kind of reports that the Addiction Research Foundation is putting out. As I told him, the latest reports say that alcohol is the major problem—

Mr. Reid: That's a drug!

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think we have put a lot of attention toward that, and the schools are doing just that—

Mr. Roy: But drugs are increasing.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —but to make a statement that the use of drugs has increased in the last few years without documenting it is irresponsible.

Mr. Gaunt: Well, it has!

Mr. Reid: Where has the minister been?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Read the speeches I have made on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside.

HEALTH PROBLEMS OF INDUSTRIAL RADIOGRAPHERS

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health regarding a Canadian Press news item of Feb. 21, in which the director of Alberta's industrial health services referred to an appalling rate of health problems among industrial radiographers. I have two questions: Approximately how many industrial radiographers are there in Ontario?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Let's have that figure.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Burr: And, secondly, have they an appalling rate of health problems?

Mr. Speaker: Can the minister answer that?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't tell him how many industrial radiographers there are, and I don't know of any appalling health problems. I do know that we now are considering licensing radiological laboratories in the province so that we will have some control over it. I will check and see if I can find out how many industrial radiographers there are in the province. There is just no way I can give the hon. member that information now.

Mr. Speaker: One final question by the member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Burr: Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: No supplementaries. We are just about out of time. We will allow the member for Windsor-Walkerville one short question.

STRIKE AGAINST WINDSOR UTILITIES COMMISSION

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour.

In view of the fact that Local 911 has been on strike now for eight weeks against the Windsor Utilities Commission, has the minister's office attempted to get in touch with both parties involved to get them together and resolve the issue?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is very concerned about the situation. He has approached me several times, and I am just as eager as he is to see it resolved. Yes, I have in fact asked officials of my department to meet with both sides as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The question period has expired.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Mr. White: A question was asked a week ago and I now have an update, if I have the permission of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have the permission of the House to have this answered?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Let's have it.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Is the Treasurer going to resign?

Hon. Mr. White: It relates to Brantford.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: At the request of the member for Brantford (Mr. Beckett), I have sent the following telegram to Brant county:

WITH REFERENCE TO YOUR LETTER OF—

I don't know what the date is.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The hon. member for Brantford looked surprised.

Hon. Mr. White: The telegram says:

IF IT BECOMES IMPOSSIBLE FOR MR. SMITH TO COMPLETE THE STUDY IN THE TIME SPECIFIED, ADDITIONAL TIME WILL BE GRANTED.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Potter presented the fourth report of the mercury task force.

Mr. Henderson from the standing procedural affairs committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private Acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient.

County of Hastings;

Service Hardware Ltd.;

City of Barrie

Township of Sarnia;

S. B. Young Ltd.;

Timrand Investments Ltd.;

City of Sault Ste. Marie.;

Town of Brampton.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to present the hon. provincial Treasurer with a gift to ensure he will sweat over the energy tax with which he wishes to burden the taxpayers of the province.

Mr. Speaker: Is that a report?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, to save the page coming over; I have made it a practice since being elected in 1959 not to accept presents, and I would be particularly unwise to accept this one.

Mr. Deacon: This is not a present under the table.

Mr. Speaker: Touché.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Treasurer is still driving around in that stripped-down Chev.

Mr. Taylor, from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the City of St. Thomas.

Bill Pr12, An Act respecting the Board of Education for the Borough of Etobicoke.

Bill Pr32, An Act respecting New Augarita Porcupine Mines Ltd.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr22, An Act respecting the Township of Gloucester.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

TOWN OF BRAMPTON ACT

Mr. Kennedy moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the Town of Brampton.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Are they going to change its name?

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, to satisfy the curiosity opposite, this bill establishes a pedestrian mall for eight days.

Mr. Speaker: There is no explanation necessary.

Mr. Kennedy: Well, he was curious.

RETAIL SALES TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for first reading of the bill.

The House divided on the motion for first reading of the bill, which was approved on the following vote:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried. Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Could the provincial Treasurer give us his private phone number so those of opposite view could get in touch with him on this?

Mr. Speaker: Order please! May we just complete this order of business?

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Chatham-Kent): Ha, ha. Funny!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I thought it was pretty good.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is good to hear from the member for Chatham-Kent—the elder statesman.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the amendments contained in this bill fall into two categories—those which are budgetary and those which are of a housekeeping nature.

Mr. Lewis: Those which are odious and those which are disparaging.

Mr. Bullbrook: The word is house-cleaning.

Hon. Mr. White: The budgetary changes provide for the increase in the retail sales tax rate from five per cent—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Hon. Mr. White: —to seven per cent. The new rate of tax, effective July 1, will apply to all forms of energy consumed in the province, except energy used directly in the manufacture of tangible personal property or in farming production. Electricity used in providing public transportation will not attract this tax.

The exemption for prepared meals is raised from $2.50 to $4, and new exemptions are proposed for plants and flowers and for household pets. Because of the impost payable on the purchase of supplies with resale special-occasion permits under the Liquor Licence Act, final purchasers of liquor, beer and wine purchased under such permits will be exempt from sales tax as well.

The housekeeping amendments are designed to clarify the meaning of certain provisions of the Act and will improve administration of the Act in general.

Mr. Lewis: Why doesn't the Treasurer withdraw it now instead of suffering the humiliation later.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

On vote 1502:

Mr. Chairman: Item 3.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): That's right, Mr. Chairman. I believe I was speaking on the item the other night concerning emergency measures.

I listened with interest last night to the debate between the member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) and the minister concerning the high water levels in Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. I was concerned when the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence) said he thought that perhaps a new agency should be set up in the Province of Ontario to deal with the flooding conditions that exist along the Great Lakes system.

I was wondering, if the minister already has an agency known as the Emergency Measures Organization, why it hasn't been called into such areas as the Niagara Peninsula? I am sure that it was called into the Windsor area to assist in evacuation of people in the area whose homes were flooded out.

I was also interested in the matter concerning the Niagara Peninsula and the emergency measures set up there. Under the Niagara bill—I believe it was Bill 174—for some unknown reason they seem to have neglected the purpose of the Emergency Measures Organization in that bill.

I understand that for some 18 months now the chairman, Mr. Campbell, and members of the regional council have made representations to this government to include emergency measures in that bill.

I understand from the co-ordinator at the present time, Major Rhodes, that they are operating now in the Niagara Peninsula without any jurisdiction for dealing with the particular areas where the flooding occurs in certain municipalities.

I was wondering why the government has not acted to bring this organization in so that it can have some jurisdiction in case of any emergency or disaster that perhaps may occur again in the future—or it could happen next week.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that the hon. member understand the role of emergency measures as it has existed to date and as it is spelled out in the legislation in the programme. It is basically a planning mechanism. The supervision of planning takes place at the provincial level, but there are plans developed at the local level to take care of emergencies—and indeed, using local resources.

Actually the emergency measures' portion has been working very effectively, to my mind. The provincial people have been on top of the situation across the province; they have kept themselves fully informed in continuous contact with local emergency measures people. The significant thing, to my mind, is the fact that in all of the difficulty and the unusual conditions, no life has been lost. Plans have been carried out and were available on an hourly basis to take care of any emergency, in particular I think of the Pelee area.

I am reminded of an article which appeared in the Windsor Star of March 19. Of course, the Windsor area, the Essex county area, is where the basic trouble really began and has continued. There is an article here by Brian Vallee entitled "Putting it Together" and he sums it up very well, I thought. "The job of EMO is to co-ordinate," he says. Then he goes on to say, "EMO is more of a process than something you can reach out and touch."

That has been the function and the role of EMO to date, but in the light of recent experience it may be that we will be taking a second look at this. I have been in discussion with the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and indicated that if provincial hard services are to be made available there must be some co-ordinating mechanism to see that the hard resources of the Ministries of Transportation and Communication, Natural Resources and the others are available—if the policy of the government is such—through a co-ordinating instrument which is presently within the secretariat of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Once we have had this experience, a look should be taken with a view to the longer term.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the minister hasn't taken my point yet, which I am trying to convey to him.

I mentioned that in the regional municipality of Niagara, at the present time, the Emergency Measures Organization is operating outside legislation, as I understand it. The responsibility for the health and welfare of the community lies with the head of that municipality and that is the mayor. In the case of a disaster now, particularly along the Great Lakes system and particularly in the Niagara region, that mayor has no jurisdiction to call in the Emergency Measures Organization to co-ordinate such a plan. That responsibility lies with your department.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, just to assure the hon. member that we have been on top of the situation, we have been in communication with the local people and measures will be introduced under the auspices of the Treasury and Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs to bring about the necessary legislation so that item will be taken care of.

Mr. Haggerty: Surely it shouldn't take 18 months to get that legislation before this House, should it?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to talk on this item, too, concerning the operation of the Emergency Measures Organization in the Windsor-Essex county area. The director, Bob Norwood, did an extremely creditable job when it came to the flooding situation on Nov. 22 or 27 last year and again recently with the three different bouts they had with the weatherman.

One of the things that does disturb me about the whole situation is, is there no one in the department who checks on the equipment that the Emergency Measures Organization has? In this instance the truck or the bus that it had had bad brakes and the Emergency Measures Organization even hesitated to take it out on the highway.

You will say it is the responsibility of the EMO to keep the thing operative and in first-class shape. But when you provide it with a budget of $45,000, by the time it takes out the three salaries necessary for the operation of the organization, and provides $4,200 for renting accommodation, $670 for telephone costs, $100 for gas, grease and oil for vehicles, the organization has got only $250 for maintenance. That is definitely not enough to keep vehicles in full operative condition.

I think possibly the minister should have some official or officials who go around to the various Emergency Measures Organizations checking on equipment to see if it is in first-class shape, so that when the need arises there wouldn't be any hesitancy on the part of the director to use the vehicle or the equipment. Likewise, I could make mention of the communications system.

When a disaster hits, such as it hit the Windsor and Essex County area, I think that there should be supplemental funds available on a moment's notice to the director, so that he could, with the use of volunteers and additional funds, be able to get the situation in hand quicker and possibly in a better fashion than he can with limited funds.

I would like to ask of the minister: Does the department check on equipment to see if it is in first-class shape, in operative shape? Likewise, does the department provide sufficient budget for the organization to be able to operate under emergency conditions, such as did occur in the Windsor-Essex County area? Thirdly, does the department have emergency funds available to the Emergency Measures Organization so that it could operate effectively under such circumstances as it was confronted with recently, especially when you had a series of emergencies almost on a weekly basis just recently?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, as I say, the responsibility of EMO is to ensure that there are plans at the local level. Surely the hon. member isn't suggesting that somebody from headquarters at Queen's Park and the EMO should go down and supervise whether Mr. Norwood has a truck which has four wheels on it or something? I think if the hon. member will stop and think about what he is suggesting, he will realize that surely that would involve looking over everybody's shoulder across the province on every piece of equipment. That is purely a local responsibility. That is my point of view and the hon. member may not agree with it.

With respect to the financing, of course, the financing of EMO budgets is presently divided thus: 75 per cent of the provincial and municipal budget is paid by the government of Canada, because this is essentially a wartime emergency structure—a national disaster type of structure—15 per cent by the province, and 10 per cent by the municipal government. That's all that the municipal governments pay—10 per cent of the approved projects.

As it happens, the federal government froze the gross amount three years ago at approximately $1 million. So even though costs have escalated since then, it has been the province and the municipalities that have had to pick up the escalation in costs.

Mr. B. Newman: The minister makes mention that it is the responsibility of the Emergency Measures Organization director to—

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order to call a quorum.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: I rise on a point of order to call a quorum. I do so with great regret, but there are only four Conservatives in the House at the present time.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Only five NDP.

Mr. Foulds: That is a third of our members. How many of yours?

Mr. Chairman ordered that the bells be rung for four minutes.

Mr. Chairman: We now have a quorum. The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to repeat to the minister a portion of what I had said earlier, that is, concerning the responsibilities of the emergency measures director. As the minister made mention, it was his responsibility to see that equipment was all first class and up to snuff, so to speak. Surely inventory of the equipment would be provided to the minister. Likewise, on that inventory it would be stated, I would assume, that everything is ship-shape and operative. Remember, if sufficient funds aren't provided to the director, then it is very difficult to expect him to be able to keep equipment in first-class shape.

However, be that as it may, I wanted to ask the minister if the Emergency Measures Organization here has developed or has acquired any special types of vehicles that could be used in the types of emergencies that we are being confronted with now, that is, the flooding and the erosion as a result of strong winds and high waters.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The funding at the provincial level does not relate to any great degree to the provision of a preference. There was a time when fire pumpers were being provided under this vote, but the federal government withdrew from that part of the programme, so that was discontinued. The bulk of the funds is made available for the planning process. The delivery of services—the hard core, the things that you can put your finger on—is the responsibility of the local municipality, at the local level.

Mr. B. Newman: May I suggest to the minister that he talk to his federal counterpart and suggest to him that either the funds be increased or that certain types of equipment are needed? We can foresee for the next several years the need for emergency pumps, plus other miscellaneous types of equipment—such as mobile communications equipment—for which the budget of the director, even though his responsibility is simply to set up an organization, may be insufficient for him to act as efficiently and with the dispatch that we would like to have him operate.

May I ask the minister if he will pursue this, then, with the federal authorities so that the whole operation is a little more efficient? I am not saying that it wasn't efficient, but that it could operate in a better fashion. Do I have a reply from the minister?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I assure the hon. member that this has already been done, but the federal government froze its participation three years ago. Its thinking with respect to emergency measures was that they were war-time measures.

Mr. Haggerty: No, peacetime.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Now, as we are transferring over to the kind of disasters that we are concerned with during peacetime, we would like them to be involved more and more, but the hon. member will have been aware of the difficulties in participation, not only to emergency measures but in the development of an overall policy as between the province and the federal government. One of the side effects of the present situation is that it has probably directed the federal attention more to the needs of the provinces and the local communities, when areas which are really under federal jurisdiction suffer a disaster.

Mr. B. Newman: Has the minister approached the federal authorities on the need for additional funds in relation to the disasters that are affecting various parts of the province?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Our officials have made contact.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for St. George.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Chairman, I would like to know first of all, as the minister states this is a planning budget, what portion of the municipal projects budget goes to Metropolitan Toronto? The reason I am asking that is that, as you are aware, the provincial and federal governments cut out the funding for the planning officer there. I would like to know who is doing the planning now, that salary having been terminated some years ago. If it is a planning budget, who is doing the planning?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I don't have the specific details with me, Mr. Chairman—

Mrs. Campbell: Perhaps I could get that?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I can get the details for you. There would be an approved budget and sharing in that budget.

Mrs. Campbell: Could I know, then, if there is an audit of this municipal projects portion, because it has always been totally impossible for anyone to get the proper budgeting for EMO because of its connection with ambulance services. Is this something that happens in all other cities or is it unique to Metro, that EMO and ambulance services are combined?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It doesn't happen in all communities. This is a local arrangement and there is an audit.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you. Then I can hope to get those figures.

One last question which is general in nature. I am assuming that this budget, indicated as being 1973 to 1974, is in fact a budget based on the present provincial fiscal year, and not, as the Treasurer suggests, any changeover terminating at the end of the year?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member's assumption is correct.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I just have one question. Would the minister explain to me exactly what he or members of his department did, having regard to memorandum No. 1 addressed to the municipal clerks in the affected areas on April 10, 1973, from the assistant deputy minister, lands and waters, Ministry of Natural Resources? It outlines the procedures concerning financial and other assistance offered by the government of Ontario, having regard to the statement made by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development on March 21, 1973. In that circular, dated as late as it was, April 10, 1973, is this paragraph:

The emergency measures branch of the Ministry of the Solicitor General has already been involved in providing assistance, through municipal EMOs, in co-ordinating the immediate emergency on-site requirements concerning rescue, transportation, communications, welfare, etc.

I repeat my question: What exactly did you, as Solicitor General, or members of your ministry, do to carry out what is forecast or referred to in this memorandum?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The director of the branch was in immediate touch with the local EMO co-ordinator to check with him that the plans, which were designed in advance, were in existence and were being put into effect. The one thing that didn't obtain the kind of publicity that buildings on the edge of banks have received was that in many communities, when homes had to be evacuated on a temporary basis in anticipation of more serious pressures, plans had already been made to move the people out of their homes, in some instances to schools. In any event they were taken care of.

The OPP was contacted immediately in western Ontario to ensure that there was no looting. That was another significant thing that emerged. Although many of the homes were completely exposed during the difficult period, there was not one situation or incident of any looting brought to our attention.

So that in retrospect, reviewing all of the matter, all aspects would appear to have been attended to completely in regard to the one area in relationship to the structural damage which related to homes. The Ministry of Transportation and Communications was got in touch with immediately so that roads could be repaired for communities which were cut off. I think there was at least one community in which Transportation and Communications moved in very quickly in the Sarnia area to ensure that the people didn't have to go across open fields.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): That's not right.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: What do you mean?

Mr. Bullbrook: What you are saying.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That road was taken care of.

Mr. Bullbrook: That road was not taken care of.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well, people are no longer going over fields, as they were in the first few hours of the damage, to my knowledge. I was under the impression, and accept the fact, that that road was repaired. I think it was the hon. member who may have directed somebody's attention to it, because I don't know whether it is in his riding or just outside?

Mr. Bullbrook: It was the hon. member who phoned the EMO man on the Saturday morning at 10 o'clock to try to find him. He was delivering his child to the Y at the time. He finally got back to me about 11 o'clock. It was the hon. member who went out to meet with the people. Just so we understand each other—and I am not unduly deprecating the individual; or collectively, your enterprise—we met with the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development two weeks ago here in connection with some 60 families who had no access to their homes. This is three weeks after the fact. This matter still isn't resolved at all.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Is the road still out?

Mr. Bullbrook: Part of the road is still out. They still have no access.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Is the community cut off?

Mr. Bullbrook: About 60 homes have access now as a result of action on the part of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and the municipality itself. But I just don't want the minister to be under the impression that it was the Emergency Measures Organization that was the instrument of activity in this respect; it really wasn't.

Mr. Chairman: Did the hon. member for Riverdale have a comment?

Mr. Renwick: I just want to fasten the responsibility on the minister. Was the minister himself actively engaged in this, and was he satisfied that the director of the emergency services branch was himself involved in making certain that the local organizations did in fact carry out their responsibilities?

The reason I ask is not so much to be critical, but because we were relatively fortunate that a more serious disaster did not occur, and it appears to me that there are some lessons to be learned in terms of the alertness of the service. Having existed for so long without any immediate need, it must be quite rusty in many of its operations, as the evidence would indicate. The system for alerting it, and the action to be taken when the alert is sounded, do not seem to me to have the kind of dispatch and communication and attention that they deserved in the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to lead the hon. members to believe that every cog in the whole wheel of the EMO was completely in operation. I do know that during the most difficult time—I think it was the middle of March—the emergency measures people were working on a seven-day, hour-to-hour basis. The director was in touch downward with the local people and upward right to the deputy minister, who was in touch with me. I had the distinct impression that from the province's point of view the emergency measures were being carried out.

This is not to say, as the hon. member says, that others were not involved. I do recall that he was involved in bringing attention to the fact that people were crawling and climbing over fields. The hon. member for Ontario South (Mr. W. Newman) took immediate action, which I commend; he paid out of his own pocket for about 500 sandbags on the spot. That was instant service.

I was getting daily reports on the overall flooding conditions, and these were passed on immediately to the Provincial Secretariat of Resources Development. That information, together with the assessment of personnel from the Ministry of Natural Resources and others, was the basis for the unit working together and the policy development, as outlined by the hon. member for Riverdale and as outlined by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development earlier today.

Mr. Bullbrook: If I might just add a word, I don't want to carry forward an attitude of disparagement toward the local EMO man or the organization itself, because when you are standing facing 60 mile-an-hour winds and waves of 15 ft and 20 ft in height, and hour by hour you see the banks falling into the lake, you realize the Emergency Measures Organization can't do anything. It's a situation of complete futility.

But the point I would like to make—and I suggest that the minister might like to look into this—is that the Emergency Measures Organization wasn't equipped, as a result of its statutory ability, to assist in an immediate way.

We met on the Wednesday. The brunt of the storm was Saturday. On the Monday afternoon there was a public meeting held in the township of Sarnia hall that I attended. I phoned the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton), asking that he might have representatives there from Transportation and Communications in Chatham. The Emergency Measures man came. I think, if you look into it, you'll find that the basic problem was that the Emergency Measures man couldn't appropriate funds for the building of alternative access and egress immediately for those people. He just didn't have the ability to do it.

You might want to look into the situation as to some type of liaison between Transportation and Communications so that they can make those almost ad hoc decisions. The problem, really, with the township of Sarnia is they just didn't have the financial resources nor do they continue to have the financial resources. I'm sure things are being done now, but I want the minister to know that they weren't able to be done in a quick fashion. For his knowledge, I would think it was at least three weeks, and this is my guess, before anything was done in connection with access or egress.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, before I ask a question of the minister, I would like to publicly apologize to you for the certain remarks I made about your very kind disposition and character last night, if not about your general intelligence. You deserved everything you got, but I still feel that I should say a word or two about it.

Mr. Chairman: He builds you up to let you down, doesn't he?

Mr. Lawlor: Well, it's the irascibilities sometimes around this place.

I was interested in reading the other day about the Emergency Measures Organization, that after the war it had taken on a considerable number of people but they found themselves derelict and out at the elbow. In one jurisdiction of the province which had, I believe, 34 policemen on staff, it had 37 volunteer policemen working with the Ontario Provincial Police. They were people who, this article said, would normally belong to the Emergency Measures Organization, some of whom did previously belong but who now find that they have no role to play and take up this voluntary role with the Provincial Police. What is the structure of the police in this regard? Is there a place for people in that situation?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Actually, the transfer was a deliberate action. There is now under the OPP vote a separate heading, a separate item, which talks about the auxiliary police. You will see in vote 1504, item 7, Ontario Provincial Police Auxiliary. Those are gentlemen who were formerly funded out of the emergency measures funds—some of them. Now the total cost of the auxiliary police is taken care of by the OPP appropriation. At that time, we may get into a bit of a discussion as to their appointment and their role. Actually, it's a very interesting situation.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of things under this vote I want to get into, and I appreciate that they may come in under either 1503 or 1504.

I'm talking about the search and rescue units that we have. I'm sure they're scattered right throughout the province, but in particular they perform yeomen service in the north where people get hurt in a hunting accident or a fishing accident or they just simply get lost and the local detachments of the OPP find it necessary to enlist the services and the aid of many local people.

A good many organized communities in the north have found it wise and useful to organize search and rescue units. A good many of them are very well organized. They have a very good liaison with the law enforcement agencies and with the media who can disseminate information and provide effective communications to all concerned. I think that if it weren't for the existence of many of these search and rescue units co-operating with the Ontario Provincial Police that a lot of people who venture into wilderness areas in the north simply would never be found again; or a relatively minor accident would be of major consequence if it weren't for the assistance of the search and rescue units.

I had occasion to write to the provincial co-ordinator of EMO to see if there wasn't some kind of ongoing programme by which they could assist, at least with seed money, in getting one of these search and rescue units going in the community of Geraldton. There was some question about whether the local search and rescue co-ordinator had the right to commandeer a plane of the former Department of Lands and Forests to conduct a search in a given area for a youngster who had become lost. They were told that they had no authority to commandeer anything, that it had to be all co-ordinated through the local Ontario Provincial Police.

It seems to me that when you do get small groups of dedicated people who are willing to provide this kind of rescue service and search and rescue operation in the north, it's reasonable, in the absence of a lot of law enforcement presence—where you might have a small detachment as opposed to built-up areas here where you could call on even greater numbers of law enforcement officers—you should provide a little bit of seed money at least in the initial years to get these people going with the kind of equipment they find necessary.

I understand that Sault Ste. Marie has an excellent search and rescue unit. It is used as a model in many areas where they seek assistance in organizing themselves in a useful and effective way, by looking to those who have done well in this field.

I'm wondering why you can't allocate certain funds to assist these people, at least, as I say, in the initial stages of getting organized. It seems to me and it's my information that once they do get organized it takes very little by way of operating expenses, but they do need a certain amount of capital to get going. I'm wondering—I suppose maybe, Mr. Chairman, it might more appropriately be brought up under—

Mr. Chairman: Under vote 503!

Mr. Stokes: Under fire safety services and I was going to talk about assistance—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Next vote!

Mr. Stokes: Yes, but—

Mr. Chairman: Next item!

Mr. Stokes: But emergency services or the Emergency Measures Organization may be the appropriate vehicle for assisting small communities when a fire breaks out and they don't have a volunteer fire brigade.

I wonder if there is any liaison between the Emergency Measures Organization and the Ministry of Natural Resources which has a good deal of firefighting equipment in any community of any consequence throughout the north. I can think of several areas, particularly in unorganized communities—I'm thinking of Upsala for instance—where the Ministry of Natural Resources has a forest ranger setup.

I'm thinking of Savant Lake where the ministry has provided a little assistance. I'm thinking of the community of Armstrong where the Ministry of Natural Resources has quite a significant installation. They do have firefighting equipment.

I appreciate that the fire marshal's office comes under the next vote but I'm thinking in terms of an emergency when these small volunteer fire brigades in unorganized communities could look to the Emergency Measures Organization. We do have one in Thunder Bay. Why couldn't the EMO get out and effect some kind of liaison between small volunteer fire brigades and the Ministry of Natural Resources which does have equipment and, I think, would be willing to make it available to responsible people in case of an emergency? I wonder if the minister has given any thought to that kind of liaison, that kind of co-ordination, to make use of existing facilities?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, for even one family, when their home is burning down, that is, for them, an emergency. But really the Emergency Measures Organization is set up to deal with disasters—situations on a much broader scale than that.

I assume that if a vast area of the north or several communities were involved, then of course emergency measures would have to play a very direct role. I think in northern Ontario the fire marshal has pretty well left it to the Ministry of the Natural Resources to deal with forest fires and threatened communities in this regard.

The hon. member's question really relates itself to the provision of ordinary services within unorganized territories, because I think the kind of equipment which is readily available in organized territories in southern Ontario would meet most of the emergencies that the hon. member is referring to.

Now, I am taking the matter up with the fire marshal. I've also been in communication with the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle) to see whether, with this particular situation, some provision can be made—there is a financial constraint. Then I've been in communication with the TEIGA, with the Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. White), highlighting again for him the problem of providing services in unorganized territories.

I am very sympathetic to the problem and, having been in Armstrong, I know some of the exigencies which can exist in that community.

Mr. Stokes: Yes; well, fine; I appreciate what the minister has said and I understand the problem.

With regard to the search and rescue units though, does the minister have any liaison with search and rescue units throughout the province.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: Could we have a quorum?

Mr. Chairman: Do we not have a quorum?

Mr. Chairman ordered the bells be rung for four minutes.

Mr. Chairman: We now have a quorum. The member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: Just to complete my very few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the minister sees the emergency measures vote, which is $1.4 million, as the vehicle for assisting search and rescue units in areas where they do need some kind of assistance to get going? If not, where would you suggest we go?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I would think that communities would really develop their own resources in this regard. My understanding is that the resources of the Ontario Provincial Police are available in the northern areas to co-ordinate and participate in ground rescue—that's their job—and when it comes to air rescue that that has primarily been the function of the armed services, the air force. I don't think that we could think of setting up a permanent organization with all of the attendant costs that would be involved. I think that the mechanism has to be at the local level on an ad hoc basis with respect to a search to supplement these two basic pieces—the OPP and the armed forces.

Mr. Stokes: See, here's the problem. I can appreciate that the minister wouldn't realize the planning that must go into a search and rescue operation. We had three aircraft downed in the far north in recent months and that resulted in the loss of life and multiple deaths.

Of course, in a case such as that it gets good media coverage and there is a good deal of concern and interest about such a loss and such an unfortunate accident. Where a plane is lost it is given wide coverage, so you do get the armed forces involved, I suppose on the invitation of the local law enforcement officers. But there are a good many areas in the north where it isn't always possible, for any number of reasons, to have that OPP presence and this is why you have these search and rescue units who band together for just such an emergency.

What you have to do is—and it's crucial—if you have somebody down in a snowstorm or if you have somebody lost in a snowstorm, it is very crucial that you get somebody out there in a matter of minutes or hours, because if you don't get them then, they are lost. The thing is there is nobody, short of maybe an inspector with the OPP, who can alert somebody at Trenton or somebody who has the use of an aircraft for such purposes at the local level.

This is the problem, as I see it. These local search and rescue units are all responsible people, or they wouldn't involve themselves in that kind of activity, but there is nobody who can ring up the Ministry of Natural Resources and say: "We have somebody lost in a certain vicinity. Will you get an aircraft into the air as soon as possible? It is very vital that you do so immediately."

Nobody has that authority. There are a good many OPP detachments which won't take on that authority, so by the time you get through all the bureaucracy and the red tape, the poor guy is really lost and he may be found in a mound of ice when the snow melts.

It doesn't happen too often but there are occasions when it does happen and when you have responsible people like search and rescue units who are willing to accept that responsibility, I think somebody in this government has a responsibility to co-operate with them to the fullest extent. I am surprised that the minister isn't aware of the wonderful work that is done by many search and rescue units throughout the province. If you aren't aware I think you should make yourself aware, and if you do accept that they do a job I would like to see you provide them with a little bit of seed money and then some authority to take action when it counts the most.

Mr. Chairman: Item 3 carried.

Item 4, fire safety services.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on the fire safety vote, I would like to refer the minister to the 1971 report of the fire marshal. I assume this is the latest report which is available and that the 1972 report is not available.

I can't conceive why the 1972 report wouldn't be available at the middle of April,

1973, because this report, which is the 1971 report, is dated March 14, 1972, and I would assume that by this time in 1973 we should have had for consideration of this vote the 1972 report of the fire marshal

I want to ask the minister about the fire investigations which took place during the year, and whether or not there is any relationship between the criminal charges which were laid and any evidence of a syndicated or organized arson conspiracy in the Province of Ontario with respect to those fires.

I quote, Mr. Chairman, from page 12 of the report which states:

The record of fire investigations which shows on an analysis of investigations by region, county and district, disclosed that there were 1,592 investigations conducted, including 168 fatal fires, in which 225 persons died, and 40 large fires and explosions. After investigation into 1,384 fires where there was suspicion of an offence having been committed, 743 were found to be of incendiary origin; 265 were accidental and 376 undetermined. As a result, 356 criminal charges were laid in 1971 and these, together with the 74 carried over from 1970, resulted in 214 convictions, 48 acquittals, 72 withdrawals and 96 cases awaiting trial at the end of the year.

The report then goes on, Mr. Chairman, to list the large fire losses where the loss was over $250,000 and there are several statistical charts setting out the various offences.

It is, of course, natural to note that the principal area in which the serious-offence charge of arson is laid is mainly the larger centres, but I want to know whether or not we have any indication, as a result of the work of the fire marshal, and as the result of the work of the police in the areas of syndicated and organized crime in the province, whether there is any evidence whatsoever that in any way organized crime or syndicated crime organizations are involved in the relatively large numbers of charges laid for arson.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the report is in process of being compiled and will arrive here shortly. I would have liked to have seen all the reports of the ministry involved. I do have the figures for 1972 in front of me—they are comparable to the figures that the hon. member has stated.

I won't go into the details. There were 1,823 total investigations of which 1,004 were found incendiary, 239 accidental and 357 were undetermined. There were 495 charges laid during 1972 and there was a carryover of 91. The disposition was 305 convictions, 42 acquittals, 100 withdrawals and 144 awaiting trial. So that the figures follow the—

Mr. Renwick: A very significant increase.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: But they follow the same pattern.

Mr. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I may say that so far as I have been advised, there has been no pattern or link between the fires and what might be described, as the hon. member says, as organized crime or syndicated crime.

In fact, I have specifically asked and, I believe, asked a second and a third time, that the attention be directed to an examination of any particular group of fires to determine whether there is any common link at all. To date I have been advised that there is no such link.

That is not to say that that is an absolute, but not so far as we have determined. I am advised that the fire marshal has a member on the CISO, so that the intelligence will be available in both directions. The fire marshal and the relevant law enforcement agencies are aware of my concern to be assured either yes or no in this field.

Mr. Renwick: Of the convictions which were registered in this field, was there any evidence that fires were started by the owners or persons having other rights in connection with the property; or was there any evidence that the person who started the fire was in conspiracy with the owner or other person having property rights in the property?

And is there any evidence, or does the fire marshal have the information, or is it collated through the Superintendent of Insurance, with respect to any insurance companies which do not pay off as a result of fires having been started through arson, because of the complicity of the owner or other person having an interest in the building or premises destroyed?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There are individual cases where a criminal act has been committed. And it may be that either the proprietor directly or the proprietor in conspiracy with someone else, but I am not including that in what I assume is the hon. member's definition of organized crime or a syndicate. There may be some sort of a conspiracy with relationship to one incident, but there is no link between that incident and others. Of course, it may be tied in—a fire might be tied in with extortion or something of that kind; but there is nothing to indicate that that is on such a scale as to indicate that there is organized or syndicated crime involved.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the Solicitor General consider including in a future report the information available on the extent to which the fire losses are covered by insurance and that the insurance has in fact been paid? It's generally very significant, in tracing any connection between fire loss and crime, as to whether or not the insurance company feels itself obligated to make payment under the policy.

This would be particularly important in determining whether or not it was worth anyone's while to cause a fire in a particular building. Indeed, it's not usually worthwhile to burn down a building intentionally, unless one is a pyromaniac, unless there's an insurance recovery.

It would seem to me that an essential part of a complete fire marshal's report should indicate the extent to which the losses were recovered through insurance and that the insurance was in fact paid or liability was denied.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I was under the assumption that that report has those statistics in it. I have in my books here fire loss summaries for 1972 which give a lot of details with respect to fires, including a statistic on the number: 26,000-and-some-odd fires; with a total fire loss of $79 million, insured loss of $69 million and an uninsured loss roughly of $10 million. The total fire loss figure of $79 million is down from last year.

Mr. Renwick: I wasn't thinking of the gross figures so much, because that's not the significant factor. The significant factor, if I can make myself clear, seems to me to be the extent to which, because of convictions for crimes related to incendiary fires, the insurance companies have denied liability.

I think that in a future report it may be of significance to know the number of cases in which the fire marshal has found that they are incendiary fires; whether or not the insurance claim has in fact been paid; whether or not the cause of the fire was accidentally incendiary; or whether it was because of a crime that was committed; or whether a charge was laid for a crime, but an acquittal resulted. This is the lucrative part of an arson ring.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We have the gross figures, of course, compiled from the individual situations and I will take it up with the fire marshal's office to see just what would be involved in making those figures available in a public form.

Mr. Renwick: If I may, just one last question. I assume that the relationship between the fire marshal's office and the security intelligence organization is, as was indicated, sufficiently close that the fire marshal works in very close co-operation with the police in discovering whether or not there would be any conspiracy or organization behind any of the fire losses which occur in the province, because they are going up every year.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The answer is yes.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As a result of the proliferation of shopping centres and the disregard for parking in shopping centres—people will park their cars on fire routes—does not the minister think that there should be some general legislation that would prohibit this?

This is on private property, I understand that, but the public seem to disregard this. The shopping centre owners are not going to come along and ask for legislation to ticket the vehicle, but we certainly can't, from a safety point of view, continue to allow this disregard for safety by the parking of vehicles in fire safety routes at shopping centres. I know the minister will say that that is a responsibility of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, but I thought if some recommendation came either from his ministry or from the fire marshal, then my own community would not have to ask for special legislation to control that type of parking.

I would have assumed that the way it affects my community is the way it affects every community in the Province of Ontario—general legislation would be needed to prevent parking in designated fire routes in shopping centres and shopping plazas. May I have the minister's comments on that?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is enabling legislation which permits municipalities to do this. I understand that Windsor did receive from the fire marshal sample bylaws and that in effect they have implemented and passed the by-laws and are satisfied with the nature of the bylaws. I don't know whether there is some specific situation here. Is the hon. member indicating that the bylaws which were passed by Windsor are not effective?

Mr. B. Newman: I have not been informed that Windsor has even passed a bylaw similar to what has been mentioned. But let's assume that the municipality does pass the bylaw. Don't you, Mr. Minister, think that this should be general legislation rather than be controlled by an individual municipality? This should be general throughout the Province of Ontario, especially with fire routes. It shouldn't be the responsibility of the municipality, it should be in general legislation.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The legislation is general. It's enabling legislation, I believe within the Municipal Act, which enables municipalities to deal with this in a local nature and then the municipalities would have to spell out the terms of the bylaw to fit the needs within their own communities. Quite a number of communities within Ontario have done so—Scarborough, Ottawa, East York—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): What about those that don't? I think that is what he is trying to get at.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Then I think that the citizens should talk to the local municipalities and the city councils.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the fact that it hasn't been passed by all municipalities indicates that there is need for action on the part of the Minister of Transportation and Communications or your department to have this general throughout the province, so that when an individual goes to a shopping centre, regardless of the community, he knows that if he parks in the fire route area he will be ticketed. As it is now, there is no provision whatsoever. It is entirely up to the municipality itself to come along and introduce a bylaw respecting that. I don't think that's the right way to approach it, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, here again, does the hon. member expect me to run the fire routes in Windsor out of the fourth floor of the Hearst block? Certainly not. I am sure that the hon. member for St. George would be aghast, if I may use that term, at such a proposition. This is something which is definitely at the local level. Surely the citizens who are concerned about their own health and safety can bring this matter to the attention of the councillors and have the necessary bylaws passed?

Mr. B. Newman: Does the minister think that a municipality that does not pass such a bylaw should allow vehicles to be parking in a fire route? What are you going to do about the municipality that doesn't pass the bylaw? Where does the fire marshal come into the picture then? Where is the safety of the people who have gone into the shopping centre? Aren't you concerned with their safety at all? You are certainly not concerned if you refuse to act on the provincial level.

Mr. Bullbrook: Do we leave that lie dormant?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Bullbrook: Does that lie dormant without response; except the nod of the Solicitor General's head?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I believe the hon. member slipped into his chair after I said I do not propose, from the fourth floor of the Hearst block, to designate and control fire routes in shopping plazas within the communities. I think this is a responsibility at the local level.

The Municipal Act has hundreds of pages of enabling legislation by which councils are called upon to provide for the health, care and attention of their citizens. That is where the responsibility is and that is where the responsibility should be.

Mr. Bullbrook: As a matter of technical interest, if I might inquire, I am thinking of one shopping centre in my riding that abuts two public roads. The other periphery is a private road. Just as a matter of interest to me, the parking areas being private property, is there statutory power for emergency vehicles to go on there?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: My understanding is that there is such enabling legislation. As a matter of fact, it relates to something that the hon. member's colleague, the member for Downsview, was raising about police security guards enforcing bylaws on private property. I would think the two are definitely related. There is enabling legislation.

It is fairly recent, I think, but I am given to understand there is enabling legislation. There must be if Scarborough, East York, Ottawa and Windsor have passed bylaws to take care of these situations.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Chairman, I have a topic under this vote and perhaps the minister can indicate if it comes within his jurisdiction.

Some time ago the insurance companies raised the rates or the cost of insurance in northern Ontario based on the fact that they felt the fire departments of those communities in northern Ontario, particularly those communities which had voluntary fire forces rather than permanent or regular forces, were a higher risk factor than those areas which had permanent forces. I wonder if the Ontario fire marshal had any input into that kind of decision and whether it is within your jurisdiction to make any recommendation or report on a situation such as that?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the question is no, and I believe it would come within the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, which has, I believe, all matters relating to insurance. The Superintendent of Insurance is in that ministry.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): I'd like to pursue that further. I think what my colleague has said really does come under this minister's department. If the minister has made any study, as I hope he has, of the quality of fire protection provided by volunteer brigades as compared with that of full-time brigades he would have evidence to show whether or not there is a difference in risk.

We happen to live in an area where there is a volunteer brigade. It is one of the finest brigades I have ever come across anywhere. We have had partially burned barns—and I don't think that is a very common occurrence when you get a fire department arriving at a farm  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles or  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles or more from its location, and getting there in time to actually save one of those highly inflammable buildings! If the minister is doing his job in this department he will have the figures concerning the degree of risk as between voluntary brigades and full-time brigades. I would like to know what he has in that form of information for the insurance companies and for the public.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We have never had a request from insurance companies to do that kind of study. I agree with the hon. member that, from what I have heard, the activities of volunteer brigades throughout the province do achieve a very high standard. I would assume that those taking up the risks go on the experience within a community, in addition to the kind of facilities that are available.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I don't want to pursue this unduly, but surely the fire marshal is charged, among other things, with keeping statistics of this sort and reporting through you to the Legislature.

Mr. Deacon: And to the councils. They have the information.

Mr. Reid: And to the various councils involved. Would the minister not think that it is imperative that the fire marshal do keep such records, not in the interest of the insurance companies, but in the interest of the public at large and the people who are being affected by these insurance rates?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I don't know what the hon. member is driving at. What records is he referring to?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, the minister says he has no records or statistics and was not asked to make a study of statistics in regard to the relative success in fighting fires or the relative statistics in fire losses, due to either a permanent, regular firefighting force as opposed to a voluntary force. I would think that this is material that you should have available for the public interest, not for the insurance companies' interest.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, we have all kinds of statistics relating to fires right across the province. What I indicated was that we had never made a study in relation to this. Both the hon. members would know that the fire insurance premiums are based on the experience and the potential risks. I would imagine if you had a community that had no fires at all over a period of time that the insurance rates would be adjusted accordingly within the community.

Mr. Reid: Just let me finish, if I may.

Mr. Stokes: No. According to firefighting capability.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I have to disagree with the minister, particularly when he says "potential." Surely we have to go on what has happened in the past, particularly in regard to these matters, and this is why I'm asking for the statistics. I feel that the smaller communities across the province, particularly in northern Ontario, are being discriminated against by the insurance companies. They are using this as an excuse. They say, "You have a voluntary force.

Therefore, you people in your community are going to pay more money."

Mr. Renwick: There's no doubt about that. There is discrimination, whether it's the minister's fault or not.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Actually, Mr. Chairman, that aspect has never been brought to my attention.

Mr. Reid: Will you look into it, now that it has?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Will the hon. member give me some facts that need to be checked into?

Mr. Reid: Yes, I will send you the correspondence.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Fine!

Mr. Stokes: Let me pursue that matter.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, the reason I feel it is important, in addition to the homeowner and the insurance rates, is that the decision of councils can be affected by their knowledge of the benefit that will be given residents if they have a full-time brigade versus a part-time brigade. It is important that these statistics be made available. As I mentioned, we have in one part of Markham two volunteer brigades and we have a full-time brigade in another. I understand that because of the very favourable experience with volunteer brigades the city of Sudbury is going back to using volunteer brigades with a certain amount of a permanent force always at the station. In fact, these volunteers have been so well trained and they have developed such a spirit that they are highly efficient.

I well remember, a matter of 15 years or so ago, when a great deal of development was beginning to occur in our community, that we were trying to decide as a council whether or not we should provide for a full-time brigade in one of the more heavily developed parts of the municipality. I thought that it would be useful to come to the Ontario fire marshal to find out just what the experience is in fire protection needs. I was surprised that there was nothing in the way of assistance that could be provided me by the fire marshal.

I got my statistics in the end from the insurance people, and I was sorry to think that we have to depend on those agencies for statistics when we have a branch of government that is charged with that responsibility. I suggest, I recommend and I urge the minister to ensure that municipalities can get from this branch of his department the necessary information on which they can base a sound judgement for the protection of their people.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the statistics relating to all of the fires within municipalities is in the report of the fire marshal. Is the hon. member saying that he went to the fire marshal of the Province of Ontario, asked for certain statistics and these were not available to him? If so, what statistics?

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to get comparative statistics as to the quality of protection that could be expected from adopting a full-time fire service versus a volunteer setup. In other words, what is the best thing to provide for? I also wanted to know what type of equipment we should provide for; how much we should be planning and budgeting for in the way of equipment for certain concentrations of population. Those statistics were not available, and I thought that sort of information could have been provided by a branch that was really doing a thorough job of researching the needs for protection of property.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I have just checked and I don't know who the hon. member went to—

Mr. Deacon: The Ontario fire marshal.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The Ontario fire marshal's office is prepared and equipped to give out information of the kind that the hon. member latterly indicated, as to the type of equipment, the range of equipment and the amount of equipment that would be suitable for a community. However, we have not made a study of comparative costs.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, what I'm trying to get across to the minister is that it's fine for them to recommend something, but the elected councillors are charged with the responsibility of making a decision; and they should have statistics and information of a comparative nature, based on research that the fire marshal could provide, as to the alternatives. Is there a greater degree of risk by taking one route compared to another? Is there experience as to what type of equipment should be provided in certain types of developments? These are the things that we should be able to get from the department but at that time, which is a long time ago, it wasn't available. I was asking what information the department has, other than how many fires there were and how much damage had occurred.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I will send the hon. member the handbook on fire protection for the Province of Ontario, which spells out all of those details—the fire loss, the costs, the number of firemen, the amount of equipment and so on.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Thunder Bay is first.

Mr. Stokes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Less than a year ago there was a civic function in White River in the riding of Algoma, and the fire marshal happened to be there on a tour. We had a conversation, and I got the impression in speaking to him that he was just in the process of completing a report to the appropriate minister about the adequacy of firefighting forces and equipment in the north. It was my understanding that he was going to make some recommendations to government that would provide greater firefighting capacity in most areas in the north. I would hope that would include assistance for unorganized communities.

I don't want to hash over old ground and, in fairness to the dialogue that the minister and I have had about particular situations in the north of recent days, I have a commitment from him that he is going to attempt to get some assistance for firefighting forces in unorganized communities through the Ministry of Community and Social Services or whatever is the appropriate agency.

I appreciate what he is attempting to do, but this whole area bothers me a little. After this conversation with the fire marshal, he was preparing a report or a study and was going to make some recommendations to the appropriate ministry on how government might assist these unorganized communities. Was I wrong in that assumption? If I wasn't wrong, what has become of that report or what was the result of the tour that he was undertaking at that time?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: This was a study that was done by the Ministry of Natural Resources with an input from the fire marshal. I believe that the letter is on my desk, going from me to the Treasurer (Mr. White) which is a further follow-up to the correspondence I have had with the hon. member that that study be updated to see what the current needs are, together with the expenditures which would be involved. It's fortunate that he is both the Treasurer and the Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. Stokes: Well, is it the minister's impression that something meaningful will be done to assist volunteer firefighting forces in the north and particularly in unorganized communities?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I bring to the attention of the hon. member again the financial constraints which are upon the province and the fact that a whole list of priorities have to be made—and there have to be some very difficult decisions made upon the choices of meritorious projects.

Mr. Renwick: Why do they always have to be against the north?

Mr. Stokes: Surely—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, Mr. Chairman. If that is on the record, that is not the instance.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): They are always made in discrimination toward the north. Look at the minister's budget. Look at his estimates.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There are many communities throughout Ontario which have the same problems.

Mr. Stokes: But they are not communities that are 100 miles apart.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well, all they have to be is 40 miles away from a firehall when the barn goes up. Now, the hon. member is left with a half-burned barn and he thinks he is lucky; but with most of the barns in southern Ontario, once they catch fire they go up. I think the hon. member for the Wellington county area knows when a barn starts on fire, up it goes.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Good: One short question, Mr. Chairman. Is it true that there is no legislation in the Province of Ontario requiring a municipality to set up a fire department?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member is correct.

Mr. Good: That makes me ask another question.

In the light of the minister's answer that there is no legislation, does he not feel some responsibility in this? Is there not some conflict in the fact that the fire marshal's hand, and rightly so, is in every building plan that is submitted—before any building permit is given in municipalities regarding public buildings or anything of that nature—and should there not be some type of control of the efficiency of fire departments across areas of the province, the same as there is in the matter of policing?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The fire marshal examines plans with relationship only to public buildings, and also where the province contributes money. The hon. member is touching upon the whole framework of uniform building codes and uniform fire standards as part of those codes, and that is of course an on-going current study.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, to the minister, with regard to the remarks he made a few moments ago about the constraints and the priorities that have to be considered in terms of fire protection and that kind of thing, is the minister implying that the Management Board of Cabinet does not consider fire protection one of the priority items in this province?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I can tell the hon. member that there are a whole host of priorities and that decisions have to be made as to the choice of them.

Mr. Foulds: Would the minister care to enlighten the House as to where he considers fire protection in that list of priorities?

Mr. Lewis: The minister has never enlightened the House. He has tried to respond.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): The minister better get himself a fiddle.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: All I have to do is smile and the place just glows.

Mr. Lewis: With your own special beneficence.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I point out to the hon. member that he can assume that what is in the estimates of the Ministry of the Solicitor General are the priorities as set out by this ministry, as approved by the Attorney General (Mr. Bales).

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): That's what you assume, too, but you don't know, do you?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There is much that could be done by our ministry and other ministries in many fields.

Mr. Foulds: Could we follow that up, Mr. Chairman? It's very interesting. The minister just said his estimates were approved by the Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The Management Board.

Mr. Foulds: You said the Attorney General. Are you giving precedence to your colleague over yourself?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It was a slip of the tongue, one of the mistakes I've made. This is the second one. I mentioned Toronto instead of Ottawa and Hamilton, now I've—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Two this year; that's not a bad record.

Mr. Chairman: Is item 4 carried. Carried? On item 5, coroners' investigations and inquests.

Mrs. Campbell: On item 5—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask one or two questions of the minister—

Mr. Chairman: The member for St. George is first.

Mr. Cassidy: I apologize; I would certainly defer to the member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, I have been asked to put this question because I don't really know a great deal about the coroners' department. Is it a fact that this ministry has now changed its policy so that where we used to have a coroner's constable for coroners' investigations we now have the individual detective who is dealing with a possible homicide? I am advised that police forces are rather concerned about this. Could I know why this change was made if, in fact, you made it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, there has been no change. I am delighted to hear that municipalities want the system of coroners' constables continued.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you.

Mr. Lewis: All right, now to the serious stuff.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, a brief question of the minister first.

As I recall, the coroners have been for several years without a pay increase. I cannot remember whether or not such an increase has been announced or whether they are still being paid at the 1967 levels.

Mr. Stokes: It has been denied. It's not a priority item.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, such an increase has not been announced.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the minister elucidate for the House what is the rate of pay for coroners? When was it last raised and how does it compare with the $75,000 a year that is now paid to general practitioners by the province?

Mr. Lawlor: There's a ceiling on coroners.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the member's questions lead me to believe that he was not in the House when I made an answer to a question asked by the member for London North (Mr. Walker), in which I told him that the long overdue increase for coroners had top priority within the ministry.

I have to go back to 1957 when the present schedule of fees was set forth. I had hoped that an increase would have been available this year. In fact, I may say if there are coroners within the province who believed there would be an increase. I was one of those who led them into that belief. Again, because of financial constraints, that has not been possible.

The coroners, I think, have made out a good case; they no longer have to persuade me of the merits. The mileage is 10 cents a mile and I don't think anybody will travel for 10 cents a mile now.

Mr. Stokes: All members of this legislature do.

Mr. Cassidy: That is right, we do, too. If they haven't had a raise since 1957, I find myself a bit uncomfortable defending medical doctors. Had the government been consistent and applied this freeze to other doctors it might be easier to defend. What on earth are you doing with an extra half a million dollars in the estimates for coroners if you cannot find priority to give any extra money to the coroners themselves, whose case you say is now indisputable? Certainly since 1957 the incomes in the profession have probably trebled in that period of time.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The fees have not been raised; it's the workload which is greater. There are more investigations and more inquests with more autopsies with the attendant increase in costs even based on the present—I shouldn't say present—the 1957 structural fees.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. G. E. Smith) has the floor.

Mr. Good: No, the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry, I thought he had finished. Go ahead.

Mr. Cassidy: I would like to continue. I would like to ask the minister whether any discussions have been held with Quebec and Manitoba, particularly with Quebec, about the problems of inquests, where both sides of the border are involved. We had a recent case in Ottawa where a patient was treated in an Ottawa hospital and died a couple of hours later in Quebec. The coroner on the Quebec side refused to handle it because the apparent cause of death, or the possible cause of death, had been in Ontario. The Ontario coroner refused to handle it because of the fact that the death had taken place outside of his province.

It is not possible, Mr. Chairman, to have some arrangement so that these inquests can be handled? That particular case was eventually settled through the intervention of the chief coroner of the province and a fair amount of political pressure. It should not have had to work that way. There should be a set of rules which doesn't allow deaths that have ramifications in two provinces to fall outside the net of inquests.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I recall that specific case. It was a very unusual situation where the treatment was in Ontario but the death occurred in Quebec, on the other side of the river, about one hour later. A postmortem was held in Ontario and an inquest was held in the ordinary course, not due to political pressure.

Mr. Cassidy: I beg to differ. I believe it was something like six weeks before the inquest was held. There was an autopsy, of course, but it took about six weeks before an inquest was held. It certainly was not in the ordinary course, Mr. Chairman.

Could the minister say what is the policy then, because along the Ottawa river this has happened a number of times? There has at times been informal co-operation between coroners on both sides of the river. Unfortunately, that did not happen in this particular case, where the Quebec coroner, I believe, was also involved as a medical attendant on the deceased, and that may have complicated the matter.

What is the policy where a death occurs one one side of the border that seems to have stemmed from incidents on the other side; for example, a car victim, an accident victim, who was injured in Ontario and taken to a Quebec hospital, or injured in Quebec and taken to an Ontario hospital? What is your policy? If it isn't working, will you change it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Actually, the general policy is that the inquest is held where the death occurs. This is an example really of flexibility, at least on our part. I think the hon. member has a good point. I think when an opportunity presents itself I will discuss it with neighbouring jurisdictions, because with the mobility of people and the travel back and forth an incident such as this really would not be an unusual occurrence either in the one direction or in the other direction. It's one of the matters that I would be pleased to look into.

Mr. Cassidy: I would appreciate that. Pending successful discussions with Quebec, would the minister be willing to give a commitment that, in similar circumstances where a death took place outside the province, but related to events within the province, if need arose, an Ontario coroner would be empowered to hold the inquest?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, each incident will be looked at on its own merits and the situation.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Simcoe East.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to hear the minister say that the remuneration to the coroners in the province is under review and the fact that the mileage is being reviewed. I agree; I think this is long overdue. I wonder if the minister could give some indication whether it will be reviewed or anything will be done about it this year or whether we will have to wait until next year's budget.

I am sure that I reflect the concern of the other members from Simcoe county, my colleagues, when I say that we have had representation from our coroners. I would hate to see some day some of the coroners saying, "We are not going to carry on our responsibilities any further unless something is done." I think many of them are only doing it now because of a sense of responsibility; they feel that somebody has to do it. If they don't, who will? I wonder if you could give some encouragement to the coroners?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the member that many of the coroners have acted out of a sense of public duty. I have acknowledged that in my letters to them and expressed the hope that they would continue because it would be my intent to move the matter forward from the ministry at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, speaking to the same topic, the minister surely is aware that the juror and the witness are not there by choice, whereas the coroner selected the job to be the coroner? Does the minister not think that the juror or the witness to an inquest should be given far greater consideration than he is now? Would the minister tell me exactly what the juror or witness will receive, or receives, as the result of his being present at an inquest?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The juror at present receives $6 a day. Of course, the question of fees for jurors is not related just to this field; it goes right across the board into the administration of justice field, which involves criminal and civil law, and relates, of course, to witness fees. This is a determination which has to be attended to in the broad picture.

I am very sympathetic to the individual who is actually out of pocket. Many corporations pick up the tab and the man's wages or salary continues, but if the employer is a very small employer he is not in a position to do this.

The interesting thing I have found is that many jurors who do suffer financial loss by virtue of participation either in the coroner's inquest or in the civil and criminal field always have a sense that they were glad they had an opportunity to participate and found it most interesting and most rewarding.

That doesn't put butter on the bread but there is some consolation that they are participating in a civic duty and have the experience.

Again, we, within our own field, as I know the Attorney General is in his field, are very concerned about this aspect.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, being concerned doesn't put any bread on the table, let alone put butter on the bread. As the minister is aware, not all industries reimburse the individual who becomes a witness or a juror at an inquest. But surely, Mr. Minister, there is no need for waiting to increase the fee for the juror or the witness from $6 a day. Why, that's slave wages, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Good: That isn't a minimum wage for the Province of Ontario.

Mr. B. Newman: Surely you can't simply say, "We're going to give this top priority." I don't think the numbers involved are too great, so it isn't going to put that much of a dent into your budget. And we're living in 1973 not 1957. Surely the minister would consider raising the $6-a-day fee to jurors and witnesses today—now, not one year from today.

I don't want to read this editorial into the record, Mr. Minister, but on April 16, 1973, an editorial was extremely condemnatory, if that is the word, concerning the attitude of the government.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Good word. That's what it was.

Mr. B. Newman: The head on the editorial was "Penny-pinching Ontario." That in itself speaks for the attitude that the press have concerning your stand when it comes to increasing fees, not only to the coroners, but also to the jurors.

And, Mr. Minister, many of these jurors are not well-to-do. Many of them do not necessarily work for an organization that will pick up the difference between the $6 and their daily rate of pay. You have to act now.

Can we get some assurance from the minister that we will see action before the House adjourns for the summer break? Do I have a reply from the minister?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give that assurance.

Mr. B. Newman: Then in other words you do not intend to act. You're simply promising some action in the future and that will probably take place when there is another Solicitor General.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, just a few observations. In the light of all the fiscal restraint the minister has been talking about, could he inform the House what the cost of setting up the new position of deputy supervising coroner was, with its attending secretaries, I suppose? And also, what will the duties of the new deputy supervising coroner be? And why was he needed?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The cost is $30,000, plus the attendant secretarial needs. He is under the direct charge of the coroner. He attends to most of the needs of Metropolitan Toronto and is available on special assignment anywhere in the province to handle unusual or difficult inquests, where the local coroner, for some reason, would not be appropriate or suitable.

Mr. Good: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, one more thing. I would like—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He is a very busy man, I can assure the hon. member.

Mr. Good: Thank you. I just wondered what the new position was.

One thing, I think, should be made clear. I am convinced that the chief coroner's office is well aware of the need for revision of the fee schedule, not only of the coroners, but of those who provide services for the coroners. I am also convinced that the ministry is well aware of it. But unless the ministry gets through to Treasury Board or the Management Board of Cabinet and gets this matter resolved I have reason to believe, from the large number of letters which I have been getting in the last few months, that the coroner's system in the Province of Ontario could very well break down. And I'll tell you why.

There are those, as has been indicated, who are fulfilling their services because they feel a sense of responsibility, but the coroner is obliged to call on the services of other individuals. One year ago, Dr. McNally, who was the director of the emergency hospital services, indicated that no longer could ambulances be used for the transportation of the bodies of those who died in public places. This then meant that many areas were relying on other sources to move bodies. Removal services were set up in some municipalities and the funeral directors were required to do this work, as they always have done in smaller municipalities.

Let me state now, and state it emphatically, that I have no conflict of interest in this matter, because the firm with which I am associated does not do this work for coroners and never has. So I can speak quite freely and frankly on behalf of those people who have had to do this work for coroners over the years according to a fee schedule that was set in 1957.

Removal services and funeral homes in small municipalities are expected to provide a vehicle and two men for $15 and travel up to 15 miles outside the municipality before they can claim 10c a mile. This is utterly ridiculous. They are doing it out of a sense of goodwill and public responsibility.

Now unless the minister can get through to the people on Management Board of Cabinet, he is going to find that coroners not only are going to have their own difficulties to resolve, they will also have the difficulty of finding people who are fed up with having to work for the government for nothing.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The coroners will have to put it in the back seat of their own cars.

Mr. Good: Now I think it's very serious. It's a matter which Dr. Cotnam is well aware of; Mr. Hillis in his office has spoken about it, and so has the ministry. But nothing can happen until Management Board of Cabinet moves on it. If they don't move on it very shortly, there is going to be concerted effort across the province and, in the opinion of some individuals, the whole coroner system could very well break down because of the obstinance of this government in putting its priorities in what I would say is the wrong place.

Mr. Chairman: Item 5 agreed to. Item 6: the hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister would let me know the number of people who are covered by the $79,000 for salaries under the item of forensic pathology, new activity.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There is a director, three technicians for the medical lab—they are called pathologists' assistants—and one secretary. That's a total of five personnel.

Mr. Renwick: What would be the proposed salary for the director?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I don't have that with me, Mr. Chairman; that is a contract arrangement approved by Management Board.

Mr. Renwick: A contract arrangement with an individual or with some service?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: With Dr. Hillsdon-Smith directly.

Mr. Chairman: Item 6 agreed to. That completes vote 1502.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, if I might, the hon. member for St. George asked me for the names of the members of the task force and I omitted the names of Mr. E. B. Hale of Waterloo and Mr. J. L. McIntyre of Sault Ste. Marie; and I would like the permission of the House to have that inserted in Hansard at the appropriate spot.

Vote 1502 agreed to.

Mr. Renwick: I think it's 6 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, before I move the adjournment of the House, I'd like to say that the first item of business on Tuesday next will be the bill that was introduced today by the Treasurer (Mr. White).

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): They're ramming it through.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The second item will be item No. 2, and if we conclude these items we shall deal with Nos. 11 and 13 standing on the order paper today.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): But, Mr. Speaker, surely—since the bill that would increase the sales tax was just introduced today and hasn't been printed—we can have a day or two to have a look at the final form of the bill before it is debated in second reading? What is the government trying to do, ram it through before people realize how bad it is? I think that's just ridiculous.

An hon. member: That stinks!

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I think the hon. member knows very well that I wouldn't do that.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I know what the House leader is trying to do.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I don't think the hon. member does, or he wouldn't speak that way. I will take the matter under consideration and, in the meantime, if that change is made, then we would deal with the items after that as I enumerated.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We have this afternoon as our guests in the east gallery students from New Toronto Secondary School of New Toronto and senior citizens from the New Toronto Senior Citizens' Group of New Toronto. In the west gallery we have students from Winston Churchill Collegiate Institute of Scarborough and St. Mary's Separate School of Toronto. At 3 o'clock we will be joined in the east gallery by students from Glendale High School from Hamilton.

Statements by the ministry.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): We should have a crisis every day. They're all here.

ANSWER TO WRITTEN QUESTION

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Where is the Premier?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the answer to question 5 on the order paper. (See Appendix, page 1228).

Mr. Lewis: What about 1, 2, 3 and 4?

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Come on, Treasurer.

PERSPECTIVES ON INCOME SECURITY

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, as recently as 12 days ago, when I presented minor adjustments with regard to welfare assistance rates and comfort allowances for residents in institutions, I informed the hon. members that these were temporary adjustments pending an overall review of income security at an upcoming federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers. This three-day conference convenes tomorrow in Ottawa.

When I spoke on the subject, I explained to hon. members that income security studies have been proceeding for some time in the various provinces, including our own. In these studies we have been examining positive approaches that should be taken in revamping our social security programmes, since what we have today is a conglomeration of programmes, both in social insurance and other forms of social assistance, and in the taxation field. Toward this end, Ontario has now produced basic principles on income security which it recommends in the report prepared by a group of senior public servants known as the task force on income security.

Today I am tabling in the House that report entitled, "Perspectives on Income Security."

For members' information, those who have collaborated in the preparation of this report, in addition to senior officials in the various branches of my Ministry of Community and Social Services, are, namely, the Ministry of Labour, the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, the secretariat for Social Development and the office of the Premier. In addition, we have also received valuable advice in the preparation of this report from consultation with the department of social services of Metropolitan Toronto.

At the outset, I should explain that Ontario contends that income security extends beyond the obvious combination of programmes, such as old age security, guaranteed income supplements, family allowances, Canada Pension Plan, unemployment insurance and the cost-shared programmes covered by the Canada Assistance Plan. We see income security as an integral part of the aggregate transfer system, including elements of taxation; employment-related services, such as placement, retraining, and job creation; and supplementary housing services, such as housing subsidies, rehabilitation services and also preventive programmes.

I am also tabling a document entitled, "Ontario Proposals for Amending the Canada Pension Plan," which outlines Ontario's plan for amending the Canada Pension Plan.

As we all know, the present income security system has evolved over the years with no set of consistent goals, but rather as isolated responses to specific problems of the day. At the present time, major programmes are initiated by two levels of government and often administered by three. While progress has been made, the outcome of this unco-ordinated approach has resulted in a system which can be characterized by gaps, overlaps, inequities and disincentives.

In order to rectify these obvious disparities, which have been growing in recent years, Ontario feels strongly that an improved structure must and can be developed, and that this task should be undertaken as quickly as possible. A major opportunity to initiate such an overhaul is presented by tomorrow's conference in Ottawa.

While we recognize the urgency for such an overhaul, we also realize it will not be an easy task. Ontario clearly recognizes the interlocking and complex nature of the present problems. These are compounded by the fact that they exist in such diverse areas as jurisdiction, finance, administration, social structure and human behaviour, which preclude the possibility of their immediate elimination.

But the government does feel strongly that an improved structure must be developed and that the task must be approached in a manner designed to minimize many of the existing problems and disparities. It cannot be done by a series of quick adjustments. This will merely add complications to an already confused system.

In order to make a rational beginning, we must start with a systematic approach. To this end, Mr. Speaker, you will find that Ontario has developed a six-point approach, the principles of which are spelled out in the report that I am tabling in the House today. However, we also recognize that there is an immediate need to proceed with amendments of the Canada Pension Plan. Our proposals provide a comprehensive plan both for immediate amendments and for future development of the plan within the context of overall income security reform.

We intend to submit this set of six basic principles before delegates attending the Ottawa conference, so that they might be considered by the other provinces and the federal government as the basis from which we might begin to develop a much more effective income security system—a system which will ensure equity of treatment to all.

Needless to say, agreement on common principles is essential in order to establish a common base from which to build a more effective and equitable system. Otherwise, there is nothing to ensure that one inadequate system is not replaced by another.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, our position in Ottawa will be to propose to the federal authorities and the other provinces that the entire task of reform and overhaul of the existing system should be undertaken by a special working committee on which there is provincial representation. That is to say, the members of this working committee would comprise senior officials appointed by the federal government and by each of the provinces.

Together we have the expertise and the desire for a totally new scheme. Let's harness it today and put it to work in designing an equitable income security system based on commonly agreed upon principles and flexible enough to meet today's needs and tomorrow's concerns.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: At least they've got something to cheer about!

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: And so begins year two!

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): He doesn't like it. The leader of the NDP has a long face.

Interjections by hon. members.

SALES TAX ON ENERGY

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Mr. Speaker, after that enthusiastic response from both sides of the House, perhaps this statement is unnecessary, but I would like to make a brief statement on a matter relating to government policy with respect to the provincial budget.

At the end of last week, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Treasurer (Mr. White) to review his proposal for a seven per cent retail sales tax on energy sources and to determine whether the principal objectives of his budget, of the fiscal objectives of the government, would be seriously affected if it were withdrawn.

I have discussed this matter with him further this morning and he has indicated that while there would be some problems associated with such a course of action, they would not be such as to be unmanageable.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I told the Premier that last Tuesday.

Mr. Cassidy: Now the Premier is going to bail him out.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Therefore, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Cassidy: Why didn't the Premier say that before the budget?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the provision for a seven per cent retail sales tax on energy sources will be withdrawn from the legislation presently before the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Thank God for the caucus of this party, and the people of this province.

An hon. member: No thanks to you.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Aren't the opposition in favour?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): They are unhappy. None of them applauded.

Hon. Mr. Davis: May I add, Mr. Speaker, that I continue to have the greatest confidence in the capacity, the ability and the integrity of the Treasurer of this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Was that necessary?

Mr. Lewis: We share that. We think he should be Treasurer for ever.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I know that this confidence is shared both by his colleagues in the cabinet and by the caucus of our party.

Mr. Speaker, the budget which he presented to this House a week ago last Thursday—

Mr. Lewis: Was an exemplary budget.

Hon. Mr. Davis—reflected his concern for many of the pressing and difficult problems now facing this province; a concern, Mr. Speaker which is shared not only by the government but by private citizens right across this province.

Mr. Cassidy: As the Premier learned afterwards.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are confident that the measures it contains will benefit the people of this province and will help to bring about the solutions to these problems that we all wish to see.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): They won't forget it.

Mr. Lewis: One reversal after another. One reversal after another.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are confident, Mr. Speaker, that the new plan announced in the Treasurer's budget to stabilize property taxes by giving $180 million more to municipalities in Ontario—

Mr. MacDonald: That is another illusion.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—will go a long way to solve the increasingly difficult problems of municipal finance. It will permit them to reduce the burden of property taxes on Ontario homeowners and make the property tax as a whole more equitable. This will be especially true in the cities and towns of northern Ontario, which will receive an extra income of $6 million.

Mr. Cassidy: No. Those guys are too easily conned.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are confident, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer's plan to increase tax credits—

Mr. Lewis: The Premier can't retrieve it with a second budget speech. The damage was done the first time.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and to create a sales tax credit to provide $90 million to make the sales tax more progressive, and to create a pensioners' tax credit to provide $40 million to assist our pensioners, will both bring an added measure of fairness and equity to the tax system in this province and will lift some of the burden of taxation from those who can least afford it.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier said all that in the first budget.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are confident, Mr. Speaker, that the elimination of property taxes on farm lands in Ontario and the new provisions for the forgiveness of succession duties on farm assets will help the farming industry to hold down rising food costs in this province and will help to preserve our family farms.

Mr. Cassidy: What about the equity of the increase in sales tax now? They had a real love-in.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): I saw that movie.

Mr. Lewis: This is a supplementary budget and it reads no better than the first one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are confident, Mr. Speaker, that the partial elimination of succession duties and the new plan to permit business firms to pay this tax over a six-year period will help to preserve small Canadian businesses in this province.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we are confident that this budget will accomplish its objectives. It will benefit the homeowner—

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Who is the new Treasurer?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —the tenant, the pensioner, the widow, the low-income family, the small businessman and many other people in this province. And just as we are confident in the budget, Mr. Speaker, we are confident in the Treasurer who introduced it.

Mr. Cassidy: Why does he say it twice? He is protesting too much.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Why doesn't the Premier get rid of his aircraft?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In my view, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: That is the second vote of confidence in the same budget.

Mr. Cassidy: Try it again.

Mr. Lewis: A vote of confidence on every page.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In my view, Mr. Speaker, what we have heard in the past week and one-half has been an expression in many parts of the province of a very genuine personal concern in connection with the proposed seven per cent tax on energy sources—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): And of confidence in this government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and the nature of the impact it has been suggested that this measure might have upon some people.

Mr. Cassidy: There is a concern about this government as well, and not just the tax. There are thousands of Conservatives who will never vote for this government again. They won't forget.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This concern, Mr. Speaker, while genuinely felt, has tended to overlook not only the many additional benefits that will accrue to such people, both directly and indirectly, but more importantly the particular care which was taken by the Treasurer in attempting to see that no real hardship would be inflicted on those least able to bear it.

Mr. Singer: They should both resign.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: He said it would be a brief statement.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is.

Mr. Lewis: He should have kept it brief.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is brief.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: He should have withdrawn it and sat down because he can't retract it now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member is agreeing with everything that is being said. That is his problem.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is agreeing with everything that is being said—and he knows it.

Mr. Lewis: I agree with the first paragraph; that was fine. But the rest is just nonsense—it's a second budget.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: The Treasurer has cost the government 30 seats.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Snow White is a little dirty.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, at the end of last week, when it became apparent that the introduction of this measure—

Mr. Lewis: Two budgets in less than two weeks.

Mr. Stokes: Remember what happened to Walter Gordon!

Hon. Mr. Davis: —had only served to produce a growing public concern with respect to the personal hardship and inequity that had been suggested might result, I asked the Treasurer to reconsider this tax—

Mr. Singer: He went out and got another sweater and took off.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why doesn't the hon. member pick up his foot and put it back in his mouth?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and to determine whether, in view of the manner in which it had been received and the widespread reaction it had produced, it might be withdrawn.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is back on page 2. He has lost his place.

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, Mr. Speaker, the decision to do so will not affect his decision to proceed with all of the other proposals contained in his budget—

Mr. Lewis: I should think not!

Hon. Mr. Davis: —nor the intention of the government to support him in that effort.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): For the time being.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: That is the third vote of confidence.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): They'd better resign.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is talking it to death. It is too much. He said it all in his first paragraph.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You know why? The hon. member doesn't like to hear it. He doesn't like to hear it.

Mr. Lewis: What do you mean? I am glad to hear it, but all the rest of this is nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Then listen!

Mr. Cassidy: Even the Premier's own cabinet colleagues are embarrassed by now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to clear up a misapprehension which seems to have developed with respect to the kind of confidentiality that must surround the preparation of any budget.

Mr. Lewis: Yes—not to mention comment after the budget.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It has been a long-established principle of parliamentary democracy, adhered to at Westminster and the Parliament of Canada, and indeed in parliaments throughout the world, that the Treasurer may not reveal the contents of his budget to anyone not bound by the oath of secrecy.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And to resign when he makes a major error.

Mr. Singer: This is the principle of responsible government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The observance of this principle has served to protect the public interest and to prevent any possibility of personal advantage or private gain that would be available to anyone possessed of such prior knowledge.

An hon. member: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But while the contents of the budget may not be revealed in advance—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Doesn't the Premier trust his backbenchers?

Mr. Lewis: From 1315 AD treasurers have resigned in such cases.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —there is nothing in tradition or precedent to prevent any treasurer from withdrawing any budget proposal, should he subsequently determine that for some reason it is unacceptable.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: That is true.

Mr. Shulman: There was Walter Gordon.

Mr. Cassidy: Walter Gordon resigned. Now what about the member for London South?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, it is a fact; check the precedents.

Mr. Singer: That is the same as we have no right to know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This has occurred in the past, and no doubt it will occur again.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Look at those sullen anxious faces behind him. Oh yes, look at them. This is a day of mourning for them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, they are delighted.

Mr. Lewis: Look at them over there. Look at those rigid faces.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are delighted.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a day of mourning for the hon. member.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, while I do not expect that such a course would be without its consequences, I am determined that the government that I head and the party that I lead will continue to remain responsive to the wishes and the will of the people of this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If this means that we must change our minds or modify our policies, let it be known that we are prepared to do so.

Mr. Singer: Change treasurers. Try again.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And while this may confound our opposition, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: Election finances.

Mr. MacDonald: I think it is confounding the truth on that side.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I suspect that the people of Ontario would prefer responsiveness to rigidity in government, because that is what public participation in the democratic process is all about.

Mr. Lewis: What about regional government?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): This is the Treasurer's greatest moment.

PRINCIPLES OF BUDGET

Hon. J. White (Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Premier has indicated a responsive government which is responsible—

Mr. Renwick: What friends the government has.

Hon. Mr. White: —does not insist on passing into law measures which clearly offend a great majority of people. I have learned from members of the provincial Conservative caucus, and from taxpayers themselves, that one element of the budget was not acceptable.

Mr. MacDonald: I told the government that a week ago.

Mr. Cassidy: But it won't listen.

Hon. Mr. White: This has proven to be the case with that item in my budget statement of April 17, 1973, proposing a seven per cent value tax on all forms of energy presently untaxed in Ontario. Accordingly, on Thursday of this week I intend to amend the bill to delete that proposal.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The government is a slow learner.

Mr. Cassidy: And it cost the government 200,000 votes.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the government let the minister's successor continue?

Hon. Mr. White: Perhaps not everyone has fully understood the basic objectives of the budget and the benefits that flow from the tax changes it contains. I accept the basic opposition of the public to the proposed energy tax. I do wish to reiterate, however, some of the basic features of the budget—

Mr. Breithaupt: Oh, we've heard that twice.

Mr. Lewis: Now this is the third budget.

Hon. Mr. White: —in the hope that these will now be more fully comprehended and to comment on the consequences of withdrawing this one source of revenue.

Mr. Cassidy: Why doesn't the Treasurer give the Premier a vote of confidence?

Hon. Mr. White: First, let me review the basic principles of the budget.

Mr. MacDonald: They are already demolished.

Hon. Mr. White: By the refusal of the federal government to acknowledge the financial needs of the provinces and the municipalities—

Mr. Cassidy: If the minister couldn't explain it the first time, why try again?

Hon. Mr. White: May I say, Mr. Speaker, I have resigned myself to the rudeness of the opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We can't get used to the stupidity of the government.

Hon. Mr. White: By the refusal of the federal government to acknowledge the financial needs of the provinces and the municipalities, the federal treasury grows large while the other levels of government face an unhappy choice between curtailed essential services or higher taxation.

I would not have been obliged to consider increased taxes if the federal government had fulfilled its responsibility to participate—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —in the reconstruction of the financing of the Canadian federal system.

Mr. Singer: Sheer genius. Give us more!

Mr. MacDonald: What about capital gains?

Mr. Cassidy: What about resources?

Mr. MacDonald: What about succession duties?

Mr. Lewis: The government is losing its grip.

Hon. Mr. White: Almost 70 per cent of the Ontario budget consists of fiscal transfers to individuals and institutions.

Mr. Lewis: Why is the government doing this?

Hon. Mr. White: As I indicated, it was not necessary to raise taxes to meet the Ontario government's own expenses and it would certainly have been easier not to do so. It would have been an abdication of responsibility however to ignore the municipalities' plight and their dependence on the property tax, or to ignore the need for greater equity in our tax system.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: Which the government is getting by raising the sales tax. Nonsense!

Hon. Mr. White: I proposed to raise taxes by $333 million and to transfer more than $100 million to relieve property tax burdens in 1973-1974.

Although this tax increase will now be reduced by $65 million, we intend to proceed with our proposals to transfer the entire additional $400 million.

Mr. MacDonald: The government has got nest eggs all over the place to meet that.

Hon. Mr. White: Consequently, it is more important than ever that these transfers should reach the municipal taxpayer in the form of reduced property taxes. Of these transfers, some $130 million will be dedicated to enriched tax credits to make the sales tax more progressive.

As a result of the increased tax credits, plus the reductions made possible in property taxes, there will be a decrease in the total tax burden for families having income of $10,000 or less.

Mr. Renwick: It raises the price of everything across the province anyway!

Hon. Mr. White: The package of tax reforms for the farm sector—

Mr. Cassidy: The biggest in 10 years because of the government's tax.

Hon. Mr. White: —at once make our agricultural lands as well treated as any in the world, while helping to curtail the increase in food costs.

Second, let me comment on the consequences. I continue to believe that the energy problem is a serious matter for the people of this province and that we must find ways of conserving our energy reserves.

Mr. Lewis: Well, that's not the way to do it.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister should take the sweater off and roll up his sleeves and tackle the problem.

Hon. Mr. White: As a result of the decision not to proceed with the tax, our anticipated budgetary deficit will now be $467 million in 1973-1974 rather than $402 million. Our total cash requirements will also be increased by $65 million, thereby diminishing the improvement that I had hoped to achieve through the reduction of our public debt.

Mr. Cassidy: That was phoney accounting anyway.

Mr. Lewis: That was never real—never real.

Hon. Mr. White: As I indicated in the budget, provincial spending will increase by less than nine per cent this year, or 11.7 per cent including transfers, and this is the lowest rate of tax increase of all of the governments in Canada, with one possible exception. By contrast, the federal government will increase its spending by more than 16 per cent.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: We are aware of the pressures our cost control programmes have imposed on hospitals, school boards and other institutions throughout the province.

Mr. Singer: When do we get to the part about the minister's heart-felt concern?

Hon. Mr. White: Therefore, it would be incorrect to expect that a revenue reduction of $65 million can be offset by a further reduction in expenditure.

Mr. Singer: The minister should resign.

Mr. Lewis: He can't resign. Who would the Premier appoint if he resigned?

Mr. Cassidy: The member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson).

Hon. Mr. White: I will ask our ministries to continue their campaign of expenditure constraint, however, and urge local governments—

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Revenue! Are you kidding?

Hon. Mr. White:—and other public institutions in the province to do likewise, in the hope that some further improvement will be achieved in our financial position.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the Treasurer of Ontario to propose ways of financing public services.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: There are no free public goods in our society today, not even fresh air and pure water. Taxation then becomes a question of who pays; that is the question of equity.

Mr. Cassidy: The Treasurer is using rhetoric to hide his fiscal duplicity.

Mr. Sargent: What a bunch of double-talk.

Hon. Mr. White: And how it's to be collected. That is the question of efficiency and convenience for the taxpayer.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: I believe that this budget makes progress in both directions.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: Of course, the decision not to tax energy does reduce the tax burden. There remains that fundamental social equation between the demands of the public for services and the need to levy taxes in order to maintain fiscal integrity.

That is a question which demands the serious and objective consideration not only of members of this Legislature but also citizens of the province.

Mr. Sargent: He's a different guy today!

Hon. Mr. White: I will continue to seek and to welcome advice in an open manner—in discharging my responsibilities not only to the present but to future generations of taxpayers.

Mr. Cassidy: Is this the Treasurer's first lecture at Western he is repeating for us?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: The member knows better than that! No wonder he looks so set up.

Mr. Lewis: We have to know who the successor is to be first.

STRIKE OF FRENCH-SPEAKING STUDENTS

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, because of the interest in the dispute concerning the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Board of Education and its French language advisory committee and students, I would like, as a statement, to read a letter which I received this morning indicating a resolution to the dispute which has gone on in that community for a short while.

The letter says:

DEAR MR. MINISTER:

I am happy to report to you that an agreement was reached by the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Board of Education at its meeting on Thursday, April 19, upon the issues which have been under dispute there in recent weeks. I believe that the resolution of the dispute which has been agreed upon by the board represents a fair and reasonable settlement, and that it is one which should enable all citizens of goodwill to come together again to work for the best overall development of the educational system in the three united counties.

I am attaching a copy of the formal resolution of the board which I thought you might wish to have. As you will note, it provides, first, for the shift system to be continued for one more year by Saint Lawrence Secondary School and Ecole Secondaire Saint-Laurent, and, secondly, for the existing school building to be designated now as the French Language Secondary School for September, 1974, and for the new school building which is presently under construction to be designated now as the English Language Bilingual School for September, 1974.

The resolution provides, further, for appropriate supervision by the Director of Education of the registration of students for the schools during the coming school year, and for a review of the arrangements for the two schools to be undertaken, by the minister during the first year of their operation, in 1974-75.

Mr. Singer: It has been 2½ months! The minister should resign.

Hon. Mr. Wells: To continue:

The resolution also provides for each of the secondary schools concerned, prior to registration, to be given equal space in the local daily newspapers at the expense of the board to describe the programmes of the schools and that this informational material should be prepared by the principal of each school subject to the approval of the director of education.

During my discussions with the board I made a number of other suggestions and I believe that these suggestions were also favourably received. They include the following:

That the board establish a working committee on public relations to review its relations with all segments of the community, and to prepare a long term plan to improve these relations;

That the board undertake in the near future a full review of its transportation and school boundary policies;

That consideration be given to facilitating wider use of the printing and refrigeration plants at Saint Lawrence Secondary School as valuable regional learning resources.

During our discussions several members of the board also expressed to me their hope that greater support could be made available in order to extend the opportunities open to English-speaking students to learn French. I believe that representations, which I would like to support, will be made to you upon this subject.

Finally, I would like to report to you that I received throughout my work as mediator the complete co-operation and assistance of the board and staff of the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Board of Education and many other individuals in groups in the community.

Yours sincerely,

(Signed) T. H. B. SYMONS.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say publicly in this House that I appreciate, and I know the members of the House do—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —the work of Prof. Symons in this regard. I am happy that he was able—

Mr. Cassidy: The minister created the problem; Symons had to solve it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —in a very conscientious and unheated atmosphere—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: It is that minister who created the problem in the first place.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —to restore the confidence of all the people in Cornwall in their educational system.

Mr. Foulds: Tom Symons would make a pretty good Minister of Education!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

SALES TAX ON ENERGY

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier.

Since he was aware of the decision to impose the tax that the Treasurer has just announced would be withdrawn, and he was aware of that decision before the budgetary announcement, can he explain why he was the one who urged the Treasurer to reconsider the imposition just last week? Perhaps he should accept at least a modicum of the responsibility himself for this serious error in judgement on the part of the Treasurer.

Mr. Roy: Right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, of course, the Leader of the Opposition is giving to me, perhaps, greater powers of perception or awareness than may or may not be the case.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Does the Premier mean he did not know the effect of the tax?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I asked the Treasurer in the latter part of last week to review the question of the imposition of the energy tax because I had had representations made to me by many delegations, many individuals, from all across this province expressing their concern.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: If the Premier had been in the House he would have heard some objections here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this government is responsive; it listens. We have found a way to resolve it, I believe.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary of the Premier.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Was the Premier or was he not aware of the imposition of the seven per cent tax on energy before it was announced in the budget?

Mr. Lewis: Oh, surely! It boggles the mind.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would think the answer to that question really is self-evident.

Mr. Singer: Yes or no?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary that follows from it: Why was not his advice to the Treasurer to withdraw it before it was ever announced? Surely the Premier must have recognized that this kind of a tax was completely unacceptable. Surely, he has been irresponsible and unfair in forcing the Treasurer into a position of accepting the full responsibility for this ridiculous error?

Mr. D. W. Ewen (Wentworth North): The tax was accepted in Saskatchewan, in Manitoba!

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): What kind of a leader is he?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deacon: He should resign.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have never been one to shirk any of my part of the responsibility. This is a matter in which I share the concern of the Treasurer. I made very clear in my statement the procedure that was followed; and I made it very clear also that I have complete confidence in the ability, the capacity and the integrity of the Treasurer of this province. That was very evident in the statement I made.

Mr. Cassidy: That's the fourth time the Premier has given the Treasurer a vote of confidence.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: He had to repudiate it anyway. He had to repudiate it. Sure he did; of course he did—the economic plan of the budget.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, following the Premier's answer to the supplementary question, I would put another supplementary question to him.

Does he not realize that the adviser who gave him the advice that he accepted last week and rejected this week is also his Minister of Economics, his minister of municipal affairs, the chief provincial planner, the Treasurer of Ontario and his Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs? Is he convinced that he can continue to accept that sort of advice when the minister in whom he protests that he has such confidence has these overwhelming responsibilities?

Mr. Singer: It has been repudiated.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I said before that I have complete confidence in the capacity of the Treasurer. I do not minimize the workload.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This was made very clear, if the Leader of the Opposition will recall, at the time of the hon. minister's appointment to this very onerous task. I am also very cognizant of the very great workload and the very large area of responsibility.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is a ridiculous workload.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Would the Premier not agree that the $65 million that the tax would have raised was, in fact, unnecessary in the first instance and that the opposition, which put forward that contention, was entirely correct in the fact that the tax was not necessary?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect to the mathematics of the Leader of the Opposition, it is not a question of necessity. It's a question of trying to find an equitable way to discharge properly the financial responsibilities in this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ruston: Whoever said that was equitable?

Hon. Mr. Davis: While we have found a way—and a way that has to be understood—to meet the general objectives of the budget, to pay the benefits that are, I think, very evident in the budget, there is a price to be paid. And that price for this year is not to be able to reduce the amount of the public debt to the extent the Treasurer would like to do. You can't have it both ways. Surely that should be evident.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: The government is budgeting for a deficit of $400 million.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: If the Premier is prepared to put it that way, will he stake his political career on the projected deficit that the Treasurer has put forward, because obviously it is inflated?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question is not proper.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would only say this. If the Leader of the Opposition had staked his political career on the estimates he was making on the deficit some few weeks ago, obviously his decision as to whether he stays or not would have been made sooner.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: We won't ask for the Treasurer's resignation yet because we are afraid of whom the Premier might appoint in his place.

Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question of the Premier. Since the Premier obviously bears equal responsibility for what occurred, is he also satisfied that the increase in the debt makes sense? Wouldn't it be rather preferable to find money from resource taxation, succession duty taxation, or increased capital gains taxation to bring to the people of Ontario from equitable sources, rather than an increase in the sales tax, the amount of money we need?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the leader of the New Democratic Party is expressing in the question his own political philosophy—

Mr. MacDonald: Right, just the way the Premier expresses his philosophy in his answers.

Mr. Cassidy: He is on the side of the fat cats.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—that political philosophy being that we should tax the resource industry, the corporations, in a way that would make us less competitive in the world markets.

The answer very simply, Mr. Speaker, is that at this precise moment, knowing the competitive position that Ontario must maintain within the world markets, the answer to that is "no."

Mr. Lewis: Then by way of supplementary, the Premier is still characterizing as equitable a budget which in this fiscal year extracts $280 million from individuals and families in Ontario, and only $15 million additional from corporations? He characterizes that as equitable?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I never characterize any budget or anything as being completely equitable. I am the first one to admit that we have not achieved complete equity or perfection, and as long as human beings are involved in the political process we won't. So I am not prepared to say that we have achieved complete equity. What we are attempting to do is come much closer to it in this budget.

DISTRIBUTION OF TAX TABLES

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Revenue. What authority permitted him to send out new tax tables to those merchants in Ontario who collect the retail sales tax, establishing the new rate, before it was accepted by the Legislature or, in fact, even introduced into the Legislature by the first reading of the bill?

And secondly, wouldn't it concern him that perhaps there might be some further adjustment to that tax and that he would have to amend it once the Treasurer has reconsidered it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that the administration of such a tax requires some advance notice to those people who have to collect it. There is nothing in the sales tax bulletin which advises the vendors precisely what is going to be expected of them on a certain date or which makes it legal for them to collect it at this time, and indeed I am sure no one has done that.

Surely if the bill is passed here the day before it becomes law it would be utterly impossible for the vendors to be prepared for it. It is merely a courtesy and an advance notice to them so they can prepare themselves for it.

I am sure the hon. Leader of the Opposition would be the first one to criticize the government, and quite properly so, if there wasn't sufficient time given to the vendors to prepare them for a new tax.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Surely the minister would agree that the government picks the effective date; sometimes it is the midnight following the publication of the budget. In this case it was May 1.

Why wouldn't the minister have recommended that a date be established so that he could inform the vendors of the province after the bill had become law, since it is obviously in such substantial contention even yet?

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Counting their chickens before they are hatched.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what objection the hon. member has to keeping our citizens and our merchants informed.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It looks like arrogance, sending out that information before it has been approved.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I quote from the bulletin:

The following information is provided as a guideline only and covers the more significant changes to the provisions of the Retail Sales Tax Act presented—

Mr. Singer: The changes have not been made yet, not until they are passed by statute.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will again take his feet off the desk and put one in his mouth—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: That's good; that's even better than the Treasurer. What does the minister do for an encore?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I repeat, Mr. Speaker:—and covers the more significant changes to the provisions of the Retail Sales Tax Act presented to the Legislature by the Treasurer of Ontario, April 12, 1973. Enabling legislation is being presented for consideration by the Legislature. Regulations and rulings affected by these changes are being printed and will be distributed as soon as possible.

Surely that is informational and is what he would expect if he were a vendor?

Interjections by hon. members.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION COUNSEL

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General.

In view of the budgetary problems that we are obviously experiencing in the province, why would he have recommended to the recently established royal commission on crime in certain labour unions that Mr. A. E. Shepherd, QC, be retained as the commission counsel, when our experience with Mr. Shepherd in the last royal commission was that he charged us $130,480 for two years' part-time work? Is it true that, in fact, we have agreed to pay him in excess of $300 every day?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I did not recommend either of the counsel to His Honour Judge Waisberg. Judge Waisberg came to see me and discussed the matter. He wanted some suggestions as to counsel. Then he came back and made his own recommendations, and those were the persons who were appointed. They were not my recommendations to him, nor the government's. They are very able counsel.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: No doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. Bales: I think that they will do a very fine job. It has been traditional, and I think a good tradition, that when a royal commissioner is appointed he—that person—should have the right to select his own counsel. That is what has been done in this case.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: I am sure the minister will agree there is no question about the competence of this man or the commission or anybody else, but what is in question is some governmental control of the costs of the royal commission. What is he being paid and what are going to be the public requirements in order to service that commission?

Hon. Mr. Bales: It will have to be dealt with by Management Board and approved by order in council. They will be paid substantially less, I am sure, than they would receive in private practice.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Is the figure of $300 a day an accurate figure?

Hon. Mr. Bales: No, it isn't an accurate figure. It depends upon what is taking place. They will be paid on a basis of so much when they are preparing for the commission hearings and a different rate when they are actually presenting evidence or dealing with matters before the commission.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: They will both be per diems, I take it? What is the per diem likely to be? The minister knows that now.

Hon. Mr. Bales: That will be finalized before Management Board and approved by cabinet.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: One further supplementary: Is the minister aware that our recent experience with the services of Mr. Shepherd during the royal commission on Atlantic Acceptance, assuming that he worked 200 days a year, would indicate that he was paid on a flat rate of $325 a day? That was for a royal commission that ended two years ago.

Hon. Mr. Bales: That, I think, is a different situation from this. Quite frankly, we spoke to the commissioner about it, that we wanted the royal commission to proceed as quickly and as expeditiously as possible but, at the same time, not to impair the work that they were doing. I may say that there are other matters in reference to a royal commission that cause me concern and I spoke to the commissioner about them, because I am concerned as to the protection of the rights of individuals who appear before that commission. We must be very careful not to hinder in any way their probing or their questioning, but at the same time the reputations of innocent people must be protected. Judge Waisberg, I am sure, is very cognizant of those rights.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the Attorney General tell us whether or not the protection of the reputations of individuals is going to involve more than a discussion between the Attorney General and Judge Waisberg?

Are there going to be guidelines? Are there going to be systems set out? Are there going to be occasions on which hearings can be held in camera? Are these people mentioned going to have the right to counsel? What is the basis on which these rights are going to be protected?

Mr. Lewis: That is not supplementary; the question dealt with payment.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Those matters are being carefully considered at this time and will be developed with the commissioner before the hearings take place.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): By way of supplementary, are we to assume, from the inability of the Attorney General to tell us what the cost will be, that the question of costs never entered his mind in discussing this with the commissioner?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. This was dealt with specifically with the commissioner, but we respected the commissioner's right to name and seek his own counsel.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of final supplementary, since the answer is a positive one, that the question of cost was discussed with the commissioner—

Mr. Yakabuski: What would the member have done?

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): What is the member's fee per day?

Mr. Bullbrook: Could the minister explain why he can't tell us today what the per diem cost would be?

Hon. Mr. Bales: It's not the case that I cannot tell. It has to be dealt with by management board and finalized by cabinet.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions? I believe there have been sufficient supplementaries on that question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, is the Premier still in the chamber?

An hon. member: He disappeared!

Mr. Singer: He won't need to wear his sweater any more.

An hon. member: He went out to cancel his order for a sweater.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, very briefly: If the Premier, in fact, is absent because of a press conference or other media commitments, I think he should be advised that it is more appropriate on a day of this kind to be in the House throughout the question period.

I'm a little weary of the way the House is treated by the Premier.

Interjections by hon. members.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the provincial Treasurer, in the new spirit of openness and responsiveness that is characteristic of this government—not to mention its successive reversals on matters of major policy—will he now make—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Well, do members deny it? Will he now make available—

An hon. member: Snakes and ladders!

Mr. Lewis: Will he now make available to the House the logbooks of government aircraft?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this is not my responsibility. The question should rightly be put to the Chairman of Management Board.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Well, in the spirit of the Premier's—

Mr. Bullbrook: Response!

Mr. Lewis: —response today! Thank you. Will the Chairman of Management Board now agree to provide public access to the logbooks of government aircraft?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is a good thing to change your mind.

Mr. Singer: Yes, the minister should listen.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I will have to answer in the negative on that question; the reason being there are many occasions on which the Premier, and indeed many members of the cabinet, discuss matters of urgent public business when they're going from place to place—

Mr. Shulman: We aren't asking the minister what they talk about!

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: And I think that the security of the individual, also, is important—

Mr. Cassidy: The minister means they flew for security reasons?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: —in this regard, and consequently we do not intend to release that information.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The Speaker is convulsed by the minister's answer.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The minister's answer is from the past.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, I want to ask the Chairman of Management Board: What do the conversations which took place on the aircraft and what do matters of security have to do with the public right of access to the logbooks to determine who flew where and when?

An hon. member: It's over a year ago.

An hon. member: It's history.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I might say, Mr. Speaker, it's just exactly that.

An hon. member: What?

Mr. Lewis: Well, I will tell you!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce. A supplementary?

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary of the Chairman of the Management Board.

An hon. member: Now hear this.

Mr. Sargent: In view of this period of fiscal masturbation they are involved in now, would the minister advise the House of the new DH 125 jets he has on reserve at $600 an hour—

Mr. Lewis: That's not the phrase I would have chosen.

Mr. Sargent: Would he tell us if the logbooks of the jets he is using now are available to the House?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I don't believe that that is the case, but I will look into the matter.

Mr. Singer: This is a hard day for those fellows. A hard day.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister deny that they have a $600-an-hour jet available?

Mr. Singer: Even his secretary knows that.

Mr. MacDonald: He needs protection. He needs protection.

Mr. Singer: He's had better days, too.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister deny that he has a $600-an-hour jet standing by and he has had it since last August? Does he deny that?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I'll have to look at that, Mr. Speaker, but I don't believe that to be the fact.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I can tell him it is a fact. Is he going to give us the logbook to that?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I have a strange feeling the hon. member will be withdrawing that statement.

Mr. Sargent: I can give him a phone number to call if he wants to, directly after the House closes.

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): I sure wouldn't want one of the member's phone numbers!

Mr. Singer: He's lost it.

Mr. Sargent: What did the Minister of Natural Resources tell the minister? What did he tell him?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I wonder if the Chairman of the Management Board could make it clear whether or not his prohibition against this information is going to restrict the access of the committee on public accounts to the logbooks? Surely there will be no effort on the part of the government to restrict their access to this information?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I have said before on other occasions that I don't interfere with the work of the committees.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes, but does the minister interfere with the availability of government information?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I just don't interfere with the work of government committees, nor will I with the public accounts committee.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: Are the logbooks on file? I think there have been enough supplementaries.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member had been attempting to get the floor. I was going to permit him a supplementary.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, supplementary to my leader's question of the hon. minister, would he not be prepared to make a commitment now that this information will be available to the public accounts committee? Make a commitment now.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Is that me the member is asking?

Mr. Roy: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, I have had no requests from the public accounts committee, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Minister of Natural Resources, are the logbooks of government aircraft on file with the air transport board, that is with the commission on transportation and communications at the federal level? Is that a requirement?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, this is not a requirement. The logbooks, as required by regulation, are with the particular aircraft.

STUDY OF PAYMENTS FOR MEDICAL SERVICES

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Health: I presume he is aware of the memo which has gone out to, I think, all doctors in the province from the medical review committee of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, relating to a new method of payment of physicians of Ontario as of May 1, 1973, and can he make comments on that memo?

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): I haven't got my copy of it yet, Mr. Speaker, but I have mentioned before in the Legislature that the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario was making recommendations concerning some constraints on the payment of fees to physicians, so I assume this is the one the member is referring to. Under this programme, they are suggesting that they will also have a control on quality of care as well as the payments that would be made to physicians.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, can the minister explain to the House the quality-service payment formula? I mean, it is public money we are talking about, and they are now intervening in a very direct way with the arrangements in the legislation. Can the minister explain to the House what this major transformation will be on May 1, since we know nothing of it and it is all being handled within the profession?

Hon. Mr. Potter: I can't explain to the House in detail, Mr. Speaker, because I haven't had the details explained to me. I am sure that the college has probably explained them to the OHIP officials themselves. But I have heard nothing more than what the hon. member himself has said, that the college has recommended to the commission that they will make these recommendations to them as far as payments are concerned.

In other words, their suggestion is that there will be a certain number of units of time in a day that a physician can actually perform adequately. They are suggesting that, as payments come in, any physician who charges for more than this number of units, they would recommend to OHIP officials that they check into these more thoroughly and perhaps not pay as much over a certain number of units in a day.

They hope that in this way they will be able to cut back the number of physicians who are, in fact, charging for a large number of procedures, which they don't think that they can actually perform adequately in the amount of time available. It is rather a complicated procedure to try to stand up here and explain to everyone, but I would be delighted to meet with members to discuss it.

Mr. Lewis: One last supplementary: Isn't this the strangest of all possible ways to proceed with a constraint package in the cost of medical care insurance, that the College of Physicians and Surgeons arbitrarily sets out a new formula which it recommends to the commission? Isn't it more intelligent and intelligible for the Minister of Health, who is disbursing $600 million of public funds, to announce to the Legislature what the government deems to be the constraint package rather than to have peculiar alterations implemented in an ad hoc way? Why are they determining policy all the time, rather than the minister?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate today that I will be announcing to this Legislature, when I am ready, the government's constraint package. This memo has nothing to do with my constraint package. This is a package that the college itself has instituted for its own members. Our constraint package will be announced shortly.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): As soon as OMA approves what the minister is doing.

TASK FORCE ON INCOME SECURITY

Mr. Lewis: I have one last question of the Minister of Community and Social Services, which may be answered in what he tabled—I guess it isn't. Can he tell me how many members the task force on income security had and how many members of that task force were women?

Mr. Cassidy: Pretty important.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: As I indicated in my statement, Mr. Speaker, I outlined the various ministries that participated. I believe that somewhere around seven or eight were on the task force. This was just a temporary task force to prepare us for this conference, and there were no women on the committee.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, how does the minister expect a task force, dealing with something as central as single parent families and the entire areas of mothers' allowances, to do a job, fully appreciating the implications involved, when he doesn't have a single woman on his task force? When is he or the government going to begin to give demonstration to their stuff about women having an equal role to play in these fields? Doesn't the minister think it was a serious error in terms of this task force?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Colour blind and sex blind.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, well, that is just nonsensical prattle because the minister couldn't see what was wrong.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, on this subject of women's representation, I would say that this government and our ministry have one of the best records on the North American continent.

Mr. Lewis: The minister can't talk knowledgeably about single parent families, which are central, and not have a woman on his task force.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: We have a lady who is the assistant deputy minister. We have four directors of our branches who are women. On the board of review, practically half of the representatives are women. So, therefore, Mr. Speaker, again I repeat that we are very much aware of the importance and we are doing something about it.

Mr. Foulds: What is the minister doing about it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, if I may be corrected, Mrs. Etchen, who is the director of our research and planning branch, was on the task force.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, I'm glad to know that. The minister needed a note to tell him that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

GREAT LAKES DISCHARGE OF REFUSE BY UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Can he report to the House what steps he plans to take with regard to the United States Coast Guard not using holding tanks but discharging its refuse in the Great Lakes? Does the minister plan to make approaches to the IJC in this regard?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I understand that in the United States there is still not complete agreement between the US Coast Guard, who are the enforcement people, and the environmental protection agency. Our action has been through the government of Canada, suggesting the government of Canada discuss further with the United States government a faster implementation of the recommendations, or in fact the requirements, of the agreement signed by Canada and the US a year ago April.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: Then what right has the minister to ask boatowners in Ontario to spend millions of dollars for holding tanks, when he can't enforce it on such a large operation as the US Coast Guard?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is aware that we have no jurisdiction on the American side of the lake. I might say, sort of facetiously, we haven't much of a navy on the Great Lakes either.

Mr. Breithaupt: The government has its air force though.

Mr. Roy: They do have their air force.

Mr. Singer: And those magic logbooks to record all the conversation!

Hon. Mr. Auld: I suppose we could do some water-bombing.

Mr. Cassidy: Bomb them with cabinet ministers.

Hon. Mr. Auld: But we have no jurisdiction, in fact, over commercial shipping, which is regulated by the government of Canada, including Canadian shipping. We have had discussions, as recently as about 10 days ago I believe, with the federal people to speed up action on this side of the Great Lakes and provide facilities at the various ports and locks to serve these Canadian ships at least.

Mr. Sargent: So it doesn't hold water then!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

FLIGHT OVER ESCARPMENT

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Would the minister investigate the cancellations, last Thursday, by Millardair, of the Bruce Trail Association charter to fly over the Niagara Escarpment? What role did his ministry have in that cancellation?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I am not completely aware of the matter to which the hon. member refers, but I will certainly investigate and report back to him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

GENERAL WELFARE RATES

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. In light of the announcement by the federal government on the increase in the family allowance benefits, does the minister plan any changes in his family and welfare assistance programme; or is he prepared to give a commitment to the House now that he will not make any reduction at the provincial level?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this whole question of the social security system will be discussed at the three-day conference beginning tomorrow in Ottawa. I think I have indicated we are very much in favour of the increase in the family allowances.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Passed on, though!

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: No, I am sure that there certainly will be no reduction in the family benefits or in the general welfare assistance, as a result of the increases to the family allowances.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister inform the House on how many occasions he used government airplanes in 1972; how many times that was outside of the province; and how much fishing was involved?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I recall—the only thing I can answer is that there was no fishing.

Mr. Shulman: Will the minister answer my question? On how many occasions did he use government airplanes in 1972?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as I say I have no record in front of me, and I think I—

Mr. Roy: Get us the logbooks and we'll find out for the minister.

Mr. Sargent: We'll help the minister.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would have to look it up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: Will the minister supply that information to the House?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will look it up.

Mr. Shulman: Will the minister inform us?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member for York Centre.

GASOLINE TAX REBATE FOR FARMERS

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the provincial Treasurer, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Since the new $16 million property tax credit for farmers is a most generous bonanza for those with big homes on small plots of 10 acres or so, and the new fuel tax is a particular burden on those with big producing farms—

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): What new fuel tax?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's a reduction.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Has that been taken off?

Mr. Deacon: The new two cents per gallon on the fuel tax is a big burden on those with big producing farms, will the Treasurer remove that two cents per gallon? It is an extra burden on the real farmers of this province.

An hon. member: The producing farmer.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. MacDonald: Does that mean there is a possibility of a government reversal there, too?

PLANT CLOSING OF DOMINION AUTO ACCESSORIES LTD.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that Dominion Auto Accessories Ltd. in Windsor announced its closing today, effective today, while the plant was on strike, thereby avoiding all termination notice and termination pay to its employees? When is the minister going to plug that particular type of loophole in his legislation?

Furthermore, when is he going to introduce legislation that would prevent the situation that appears to have arisen with another division of this same company, Daal Specialties Ltd. It was closed last month, also when on strike, but now appears to be producing the same product through a new company, Emrick Plastics. It uses Daal cartons to ship its material in, uses Daal dies, prints its employees' cheques on Daal cheques—and the management and supervisors are all former Daal employees.

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we are looking very closely at all these problems.

Mr. MacDonald: How long is the minister going to do that? He had a whole year to look into Acme Screw and Gear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Forest Hill.

ROUTE OF NEW TORONTO SUBWAY

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Since his ministry is going to be contributing 75 per cent of the cost of public transit, does the minister care to indicate what his opinion is where the new Toronto subway should go? As the previous Treasurer indicated to the Municipal Board what should be done with Metro Centre, would the minister care to indicate to us what the route should be? Everyone else and his brother has indicated a route.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the opportunity of voicing my opinion, but as I have already explained to the Legislature and to Metro, whatever is decided by Metro will be in accord with the provincial policy.

Mr. Singer: Metro made its decision.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister explain why the government's own plans for intermediate rapid transit are so delayed, and when a choice of system will be announced?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, they are not delayed. I have a bill on the order paper this afternoon, which will be debated; and the announcement will be made on May 1, which is just a few days away.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

ESSEX COUNTY DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education: Is the minister prepared to compensate the Essex county board of education for all costs of settlement in the matter of dismissal of the director of education, since his department delayed the decision 1½ years?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no; and I would take issue with the hon. member in saying that our department delayed the decision for 1½ years. That certainly is not the case.

Mr. Ruston: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the county board of education passed a resolution 1½ years ago, and the minister's department never acted upon that resolution, then he is completely responsible, is he not?

Mr. Roy: Speak up.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is now aware the county board of education has rescinded that resolution suspending the director. They have accepted his resignation. I think a satisfactory solution to a very touchy problem has been found.

Mr. Ruston: The minister is not aware! It is all his fault.

Hon. Mr. Wells: If the hon. member knew as much about it as he pretends to know, he would perhaps have a little better sympathy and understanding about it.

Mr. Ruston: I know a little more about it than the minister!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Chairman of the Management Board. Can the minister recall on how many occasions he used government airplanes in 1972; and can he tell us on how many occasions he took his family along?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I am not absolutely certain whether I used a plane in 1972 or not. If I did, it was extremely minimal, and I did not take my family with me. I'll check the records.

Mr. Stokes: The plane broke down in Sioux Lookout! Does the minister remember?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: But I recognize what the hon. member for High Park is doing. He is asking individually to secure information that he feels he can't get collectively. I know that. But I'll endeavour to enlighten him further on that question.

Mr. Ruston: He is asking the minister a simple question.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is very bright today.

Mr. Lewis: That is why the minister is Chairman of the Management Board; he is a very sharp fellow.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Breithaupt: The member for Scarborough West is sharp too; but people still swallow it.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The members opposite do a lot of swallowing; all of the members over there.

SCHOOL BUDGETS

Mr. Singer: In his letter addressed to Mr. Bone dated April 19, the minister points out that Metro Toronto school board had an awareness of the ceilings in 1971. Would the minister not agree that the ceilings by themselves were meaningless unless they were accompanied by weighting factors, and that the weighting factors were only given to the Metropolitan Toronto school board and its component boards just a few weeks ago?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, the ceilings are not the complete picture until the boards have the weighting factors, and the weighting factors for 1973 were given to the boards in December 1972. It was handled in this way in order that there could be input from the boards, and discussions were held with the North York and Metropolitan Toronto Boards. As a result of those discussions, weighting factors improved the conditions of the 1973 ceilings; so in fact things were better than they were when the ceilings were announced in 1971 so far as the Metropolitan Toronto school boards are concerned.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, would the minister not then agree that if the weighting factors are as important as he now admits, he was most unfair in the tone that he took in this four-page letter dated April 19?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, I wouldn't agree, Mr. Speaker, because there are about 180 or 190 boards in this province that accepted the spirit of the ceilings announced in November 1971, and in fact did the things that would enable them to arrive at budgets and be within the ceilings this year. Alone, the Metropolitan Toronto board and others neglected to take any action to prepare themselves; and now they say that if they only had been given a little more time they could get within the ceilings. That was exactly why the ceilings were announced two years in advance.

Mr. Singer: By way of final supplementary, would the minister not agree that it was impossible to take definite or finite action in regard to the ceilings without knowing what the weighting factors would be? And even though there was a facility for smaller boards in Ontario to do this, would he not agree further that a board with more than 50 per cent of the students and 50 per cent of the expenditures in education in the Province of Ontario needed those weighting factors well in advance to properly come to any system of control as the minister suggests?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with that at all; I think that there has been evidence of an unwillingness to accept the whole principle. In fact, I can recall statements by some officials of the Metro board to the effect that they weren't even going to look at the 1973 ceilings. The argument they are putting forward now is that if only they had a little more time—until June 1974—they could get within the ceilings. That's precisely why we announced two years' ceilings at one time: so they would have that time—and these were neglected—

Mr. Singer: Without the weighting factors; without the weighting factors.

Hon. Mr. Wells: They still could have at least got to the position where they could have been better prepared than they were.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Solicitor General recall on how many occasions he used government airplanes in 1972, and on how many occasions did he take his family along?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my recollection during the year—the calendar year of 1972?

Mr. Roy: He has a bad memory.

Mr. Singer: He will look it up, and he may tell the hon. member later.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Once, to fly to Aylmer to address the graduating class at the Ontario Police College; no member of my family travelled with me. I find the question insulting.

Mr. Shulman: I thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: How many suicides is the member responsible for?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Shulman: In 1972, is the minister inquiring about?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: In the member's lifetime.

FRENCH SCHOOLING IN ELLIOT LAKE

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

Relative to his statement today that Dr. Thomas Symons has completed his work in Cornwall, is the minister prepared now to send him to the next point of conflict and problems, that is, Elliot Lake? Is he prepared to send him there?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member is aware that we already have a task force working in Elliot Lake as a result of the meetings that I and our council on French-language schools had last week. This group is now working up there, and I think this is satisfactory to the people there. Until we get their report, we will just wait and see.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, I just want to inform the hon. member for High Park that to the best of my recollection I may have flown to St. Catharines during the course of opening a wonderful home for the aged for the German-Canadian community there. There may have been other occasions on which I used planes for such commendable objects.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

LINGUISTIC RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

When can we expect legislation to be presented to the House following the statement in the Throne Speech about a linguistic rights commission?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It will be in before the House recesses for the summer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

SCHOOL BUDGETS

Mr. Foulds: A question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister tell us how many boards were unable to meet the ceilings in 1972? How many have approached him this year with difficulties in meeting the ceilings in 1973?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the last part first, the only boards which have approached us and indicated real difficulty this year are the Metropolitan Toronto school board and the London board of education. As far as I know, all the boards across this province have set their budgets and have lived within the ceilings during 1972. Only when we see the audited financial statements of the boards—as we did with boards just recently for 1971—will we know whether, in fact, they were within the ceilings. It's too early to say how the year 1972 worked out. That will be available.

Mr. Stokes: It seems that the Red Rock board contacted the minister about that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Excuse me, I'm sorry. The hon. member refreshes my memory that there are certain boards in the north. There is the Red Rock board and the Northshore board.

Mr. Stokes: I wrote to the minister on their behalf.

Hon. Mr. Wells: There are several boards up there which have problems and they are probably over the ceilings again. These are special situations which are going to have to be looked at in a special light.

Mr. Stokes: Given special treatment?

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sorry, we have exceeded the time allowed for questions.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege. On page 846 of Hansard, in the second column, about halfway down, the word "psychopath" is attributed to me in a certain speech that I made to this House on April 10. I did not use the word "psychopath." The word should have been "sycophant" and I would ask that Hansard record my intention and meaning at that time. If I caused any embarrassment to anyone by the apparent use of the word "psychopath," it was not the word I used. The word I meant was "sycophant."

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Carton presented the report of the Ontario Telephone Service Commission for the year 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Carton moves second reading of Bill 93, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, on first perusal of this bill, it seems to be a very harmless enactment and an agreement that, knowing the minister, we can probably live with. On closer inspection, this particular bill, especially section 2 wherein there is a broad, sweeping and unrestricted right of the ministry to enter into agreements with various companies and municipalities, it's mainly the companies' agreement that give me great concern in view of the things that have gone on in this province in the past few months, such as the proposal by Mr. Moog, that was accepted by Ontario Hydro with no tenders called. Similarly, there are other instances which we could name.

This sets up a system of government entering into contracts which, I think, violates my principles as a Liberal and as a member of this Legislature. I think that the broad, sweeping power that is being asked for by the ministry in this particular section is something with which I can't live. I hope we can bring in an amendment to counteract this power the next time it comes before the House.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I hope the minister isn't closing off the debate. He is just answering the question?

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, I'm answering it because I think an explanation is due.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Did the hon. minister wish to make a statement pertaining to the bill itself—an explanatory statement?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Well, it should be understood that this has, on occasion, been done and I'm inclined to permit it at this time. It will not exclude the right of other members to participate in the debate.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreeable?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Certainly.

Mr. Speaker: It's agreeable; the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this particular bill is enabling legislation to allow the ministry, on behalf of the government, to enter into a contract with the successful applicant relating to the intermediate capacity transit system.

As everyone knows, there has been a competition. We are now coming into the final stages. As I replied to the member for Ottawa Centre in the question period, the announcement will be made on May 1. I find myself in the position where, in order to sign the contract I must have the capacity for signing the contract and that is the purpose of this particular bill.

Perhaps a brief word would be in order, Mr. Speaker, as to the way in which the ministry officials have gone about this particular exercise. First of all, this is a document which is public. Any of the members can have it; as a matter of fact, the member for Ottawa Centre already has a copy. These are the specifications—some 100 pages—which were set out by the ministry and the other officials involved.

On the basis of the specifications contained in this document there were eight submissions. Those eight submissions were narrowed down to two submissions and we are now in the final evaluation stage.

Mr. Paterson: There is no guarantee that either of these will be accepted.

Hon. Mr. Carton: May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is only the enabling legislation; there will be my estimates during which the sums of money that will be required will be debated. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I have a further piece of enabling legislation which I will be bringing forward during this session.

Obviously, I am not at liberty to divulge any of the terms of the contracts because we are still negotiating with both parties and we are negotiating separately. In other words, the ministry officials are meeting with one of the parties one day and one evening; and then the next day and the next night. This has been going on for some three months. So I do say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not at liberty to go into the particular deal insofar as the contracts themselves are concerned.

But I would point out there is an item in my budget that would have to be debated and, of course, the estimates would have to be passed, so it would be in order for the members of the opposition at that time to question more fully what has gone on.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker—and I think this is the important aspect insofar as the demonstration project is concerned—the people who are involved in this, and who have the expertise, basically are as follows:

From the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, from the systems research branch, we have 18 staff members including electrical, control, mechanical and aeronautical engineers, computer specialists, and application and simulation specialists. We also have from the ministry, from the structural design office, five staff members in evaluating and costing foundation and guideway proposals.

We also have, from the Toronto Transit Commission, four technical staff working full-time at the ministry for the two-month evaluation period, with their ability to tap resources of the TTC as required.

In addition, we have consultants. We have Graham Crate and Associates from Ottawa, who are control specialists, to carry out analysis of magnetic suspension in the guidance system. We have the MITRE Corp. from Washington, D.C., to perform analyses, using their developed computers programmes, of the linear induction motors. We have De Havilland of Downsview, who are qualified in the dynamic analysis of Hawker Siddeley suspension and guidance.

We have James Kendall and Associates from Mississauga, who are control specialists, to assist in the evaluation of the command and control systems; H. K. Davis and Associates, Toronto, communications specialists, to assist in the evaluation of the data communications aspects of command and control; a consultant from Washington, D.C., who was a specialist in electromagnetic compatibility and interference with respect to data communications liability.

We have Powercomp from Saskatoon, who are experts in reliability analyses and development of a reliability model for ICTS, through their recognized reliability expert, Dr. Billington. And we have A,B,A,M, of Seattle (guideways civil engineering consultants), who have produced and implemented similar guideways in Seattle, Disneyland, and Dallas-Fort Worth Airport.

There are a large number of criteria here, Mr. Speaker. I would go through these if the members so wish—they are in great depth—but I think it is perhaps unnecessary. However, if they wish me to do this, I can do this at the conclusion.

Mr. Speaker: Would the remarks the hon. minister just made have altered the comments of the hon. member for Essex-Kent? I don't want to exclude him from his right to participate.

Mr. Paterson: The member for Essex South, Mr. Speaker!

My basic contention still stands, that this opens the door for this ministry to enter into contracts without bids, over and beyond the specific limits the minister has made in his opening statement; and I'll say no more at this point.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I am worried about the way in which the government is proceeding with the whole intermediate-capacity rapid transit project. I think that—and the minister himself was saying this to me privately a minute ago—in a sense this is the first round of what I hope is a pretty profound and important debate on the question of the intermediate-capacity system.

It comes up at this point because the minister is seeking powers to enter into agreements. As the member for Essex South—is that right?—indicated, they are pretty broad and wide-sweeping powers, and I am afraid that both the public is not being protected, the taxpayer is not being protected, and if you will the government is not protecting itself from a possible very serious act of folly in the course which it is now undertaking.

I think the minister ought to be aware from the lessons of this weekend that his government has a certain capacity to trip and a capacity to make mistakes. I think the minister's reassuring litany, or attempt at a reassuring litany, of experts who have been involved from his department, from the TTC technical people, from outside consultants who have been involved in the preparation for the intermediate-capacity project, is like a security blanket which the minister has erected around himself in order to assure him that it is going to be all right.

I am suggesting to the minister that just as the Turbo train has brought infinite grief and woe to Canadian National Railways, that he stands in great danger of having an equal amount of grief and woe, and of leaving as a paternity to the province a system which is excessively costly and which will fail and continue to fail to deliver economically on all the promises that the minister and the Premier (Mr. Davis) have made for the system.

Mr. Speaker, I think the faults within this bill are two, and I'll try and talk to the bill. The first fault is the broad powers that it gives to the minister; the second fault is that there is no mechanism of control for these powers in order to protect either the public or the taxpayer, or for that matter even to protect the government against itself.

I think, Mr. Speaker, these powers allow the minister to get into—and at any price—any kind of an experimental or demonstration project related to public transportation; and also allow the minister enter into an agreement with a firm or corporation to do almost anything in the field of public transportation so long as it's related to public transport and so long as it is labelled a demonstration project.

Mr. Speaker, as the minister well knows, the purpose of section 2(2) in this bill is directly related to intermediate-capacity rapid transit. I don't know whether the minister intends that the purpose of section 2(1) might also relate to demonstration projects, such as the dial-a-bus system that the ministry ran at Bay Ridges or such as possible similar systems in Ottawa or other parts of the province. I am not sure whether it is all related to that. I regret that the minister has rushed through with this bill without particularly adequate warning. It was introduced, I believe, last Wednesday, just before the holiday, and it is being debated immediately after the holiday, at a time when people were either on holiday or else, may I say, concerned with other matters.

I am going to speak, though, to the powers it gives the minister in the initial instalment on the billion and one quarter dollar proposal of the government and of his ministry for intermediate-capacity rapid transit systems in the cities of Toronto, Ottawa and Hamilton.

I have said there isn't enough public protection here. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, there are too many questions which all of this raises in the minds of people who have examined it for me, or I think any other member of this Legislature, to be genuinely happy with the precipitate course that the minister is taking.

I might ask him—and when he replies he might be able to give an answer to this—why on earth would a simple bill like this, which he knew he was going to need, not be introduced a month ago and give us some warning rather than being rushed in just under the wire, introduced 19 or so days after his original deadline for signing a contract with one of the two remaining contenders for the intermediate-capacity rapid transit; and introduced, as I said, over the holiday period? We could have had a much better look at it had the minister not been so pre-occupied or worried about other things.

The second thing I want to talk about is the need for protecting the public. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the minister and his advisers may well have gone technologically crazy. That is they are so enamoured of a couple of systems which the minister allowed himself to be seen testing when he went off junketing around to Detroit, and off to England and off to Germany, in order to—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): In full colour!

Mr. Cassidy: Probably in a government aeroplane as well!

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Going to Detroit is hardly any junket!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the minister went off, and as these things happen it's quite likely that he said: "Well look; I'll take that one and that one and that one; and three of those." Well one of them, Mr. Speaker, actually had a top speed of only 12 miles an hour, and he eventually realized that wouldn't work.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Pretty fast for this government!

Mr. Cassidy: Pretty fast for this government; yes!

Mr. Speaker, across my desk this morning came an evaluation of various kinds of new rapid transit systems—I'm not sure if I can find it, I seem to have the wrong document here.

But I searched that document, which was prepared by the ministry task force about a year and a half ago. I scanned it very quickly, I admit, but I did not find any mention of one of the three systems in the minister's current short list, the magnetic levitation system being offered by Krauss-Maffei, a German firm.

Mr. Speaker, about a year and a half ago—if I can find my notes, which I assembled rather hastily—the chief planner for the province in this field, Mr. Malcolm Armstrong, told Metropolitan Toronto's transportation committee that a trackless system of intermediate capacity transit, with the kinds of capacities the Minister has talked about, could be built in Toronto for $5 million a mile and could operate, Mr. Speaker, at a charge—would you believe it—of five cents a ride. Not five cents a mile, but five cents a ride!

This was a quote from Mr. Armstrong of March 9, 1971, quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail.

And that prediction by Mr. Armstrong—who has certainly been the guiding genius, the guru or the eminence grise behind the minister's ventures into new forms of rapid transit—that quote came after a task force which was appointed by the government, which worked for the ministry, had spent about a year in preparing a report on new modes of urban transport. They had inspected all European and US innovations. I mentioned that they did not, apparently—although I can't quote it directly, I don't have the source here—look at the Krauss-Maffei system; or maybe in fact Krauss-Maffei didn't have it to peddle at that time, it's come up since.

Well all the same, they were looking at a system that would cost $5 million a mile and a nickel a ride. Now when the Premier came up with his plans, he came up with a system which didn't cost $5 million a mile and a nickel a ride, he came up with a system which cost $13.8 million a mile in Toronto; and which cost between 16 million and 18 million dollars a mile in Hamilton and in Ottawa. This was sprung on an unsuspecting public, and for that matter was also sprung on unsuspecting municipal councils and planning people in the three areas.

So one reason for suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that there is a need to protect the public against the minister and his planners and his government, is the fact that a $5 million proposal, offering cheap transport that could really solve some urban transportation problems has escalated into a very expensive kettle-of-fish indeed; $13 million dollars a mile right now, without allowing for any of the risk or inflation or technological kind of escalation of costs, which has happened again and again in similar kinds of innovations that have been carried out in Europe and in the United States and in other parts of the world.

In other words, that's the starting price; because as the minister himself will admit there is not, anywhere in the world, in operational use, a single version of either of the two systems which the government is now considering. In fact when the engineers for one of the proponents—I recognize we are not to talk about that—they were I will just simply say one of the proponents came to Toronto for a seminar recently and was asked about the cost of running their system. He said it would cost about five cents a passenger-kilometre to ride, Mr. Speaker; in other words, about eight cents a mile at European prices. Likely, with higher construction costs but lower electricity costs, the overall cost would be approximately the same here in Toronto or in other parts of the province.

So, instead of a nickel a ride we get eight cents a mile on a system designed to carry people for relatively lengthy distances, that is in the range of six to 10 miles for Toronto and in the range of three to five miles for Hamilton and Ottawa. We get costs, therefore, as high as 40 or 50 cents a ride, rather than the nickel a ride which Malcolm Armstrong talked about when he was unveiling the technological future and trying to persuade the Metro Toronto transportation committee what great ideas the ministry had.

I don't know if it is significant, Mr. Speaker, but some time in the period after the present minister had been conned into accepting this concept, and before final decisions were made on the short list, lo and behold, Mr. Armstrong departed. He went to Montreal to work for the Transportation Development Research Centre, I think it is, and he went in the tradition of upwardly mobile civil servants and other people who one sees around this government and the federal government, who leave their disasters before they catch up with them, and therefore are seen to be moving from strength to strength and from success to success.

Mr. Speaker, in this particular case I think Mr. Armstrong has left a pretty abortive brainchild behind him. I am open to correction on this. I must say that I have sought in vain for the past five weeks to try to see the minister's experts up at Downsview. While certainly the minister has been co-operative, it has proved exceedingly difficult to see them.

So if you will, I will admit that this is a one-sided kind of point of view that I am putting to the minister. The essence of the problem that the minister has created, Mr. Speaker, is not the fact that the technology is necessarily wrong or that it necessarily won't work. It may. At what price it will work we don't know.

It may be that some of the technical people within the ministry have got sufficient prescience that they can predict how much it will cost to make it operate. It may be that when they begin to develop it they will be excessively lucky. It may be that systems now on the drawing board and never before tried will, in fact, work in the heavy ice and snow conditions, say, of the city of Ottawa. It may be that the city of Hamilton, which currently rejects completely the idea of an intermediate-capacity system because it does not see where its 25 per cent would come from, will come around and would be interested in listening to the minister.

It may be that the National Capital Commission, which was never consulted by the ministry in designing a rapid transit system for the city of Ottawa—and which I might say is extremely miffed and very upset, and quite rightly so, Mr. Speaker—and the ministry will put their heads together and will do what needs to be done in the Ottawa area, which is to devise an amalgamated and integrated rapid transit system, not just for Ottawa but for the entire Ottawa-Hull metropolitan region.

All of these things may happen, Mr. Speaker. It may also happen that the ministry begins to talk with the Metropolitan Toronto plan review, the technical body which works for the joint technical transportation planning committee, of which he is a member. It seems rather ironic that the minister, with one hand, has got TTC technical experts and other people working up at Downsview in order to devise a plan for intermediate-capacity rapid transit, while on the other hand the body that was set up after the cancellation of the Spadina Expressway, that is the Metro Toronto plan review, has not yet effectively been consulted about the choice of routes suggested by the province, about the technology suggested by the province or about any other aspect of these intermediate-capacity rapid transit plans.

In other words, right now the province's planning is a matter of lines drawn on a piece of paper by the ministry up at Downsview and projected with great panache at various press briefings by the minister and by the Premier. The province has not got down to the nitty-gritty of talking with the Toronto Transit Commission, which probably of all the transportation commissions on the continent is the best qualified and has got the best planning, as well as technical expertise. Yet the ministry hasn't even started to talk with them, either before the November announcement or in the four or five months that have come since.

Now it may be the ministry will eventually sit down with the TTC and the Metro Toronto transportation plan review and will begin to recognize that its kind of arbitrary, one-sided and unilateral planning won't work; that it is wrong and will be wrong for Toronto's development; that it will be harmful to transportation planning in the city, and for that matter, will be unduly expensive. That may happen as well, Mr. Speaker.

It may happen that the ministry eventually will accept the views of the TTC and the need for such things as a Queen St. subway, which is not now projected in the $1.25-billion spending plan of the ministry. Or it might accept the need for light rapid transit on certain routes and then agree to go ahead with one or two experimental lines within Toronto, which if they fail will not wreak untold and irreparable damage on the whole transportation fabric of the city.

All of these things, Mr. Speaker, in that rather extended stroke, may happen. And yet, right now the whole concept of the system that the minister and his aides and the Premier and other people have talked about won't work. In other words, he's trying to deliver the impossible. He's freaked out on a technological dream that won't work, and that is why we need public review rather than this kind of back-door and intensive kind of work underway right now, which is essentially directed to political purposes and not really to the best transportation solutions for major Ontario cities.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the minister speaks of Mr. Kirk Foley, who's now the co-ordinator of this project, sleeping in his office and working every night until 3 a.m. in the process of negotiating with Hawker Siddeley and with Krauss-Maffei, the two companies which are still involved in bidding for this intermediate-capacity demonstration project down at the Exhibition. I might remind the minister that originally that project was going to have some use because it would have stretched through the Metro Centre site from Union Station to Ontario Place and the CNE grounds, but somehow it got wound up in a circle. If you want to travel in a circle down there, you'll be able to; but apart from two weeks of the year, that line will be of very little use.

What I was saying, though, is that the minister himself worked all weekend; and to give him his credit, I gathered from our little chat that he was working not on the energy tax but in fact on the transportation plan—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): North York's education problem too.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm not sure if he had his political priorities straight, but maybe he had his ministerial priorities straight at that particular point.

But I do ask, Mr. Speaker, in terms of a wise and sound judgement, about the spending of $1.25 billion—or more, with inflation—which very possibly will flow from the initial demonstration project which the minister wants and is hell-bent on signing by May 1. I ask whether that kind of decision by exhaustion is really the best way of preparing to spend either $20 million of the public's money or ultimately $1.25 billion of the public's money.

One recognizes, of course, that when the government announced its new policy for rapid transit and for support of public transportation back in November, there were some very good elements in there—particularly the commitment which we had never seen before from this government, the commitment to public transportation.

That's fine; but now the government seems to be carrying these things to extremes, because the minister has set himself a deadline which probably bears mostly on the timing of the next election. He knows that outside of Metro they're not going to like to see his plaything down at the CNE, but at least they had better see it running rather than see it half running off the rails, if you can call them rails, or otherwise unfunctional or disfunctional, whatever the word may be. In other words, by 1975 he's got to see something on the ground. The Premier told him, "Get it running or your head is on the chopper." So the minister is there with Kirk Foley and his other advisers—

Mr. Singer: The Premier never fires anybody—not even the Treasurer (Mr. White).

Mr. Cassidy: —and all of these people from DeLeuw Cather who are getting fat fees of $1,000 per team per day in order to advise the minister. It seems to me that they are telling him exactly and precisely what he wants to hear, Mr. Speaker, which is another reason for suggesting that we really do need some protection from the minister and his people, and from the government; and it should be included in the bill. What it should specifically be is the possibility of a brief but intensive public review of the systems and concepts—the concept particularly—that the government is trying to put over. So let me talk about that.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that I prepared this speech in haste and I cannot cite chapter and verse of all the government's proposals. I am just trying to see whether these notes will yield the points exactly. But let me talk about the main features which I believe are laid out in those technical specifications that the minister had passed around, and which in fact I received just late last week. I am afraid that I haven't had a chance to have as good a look at them as I would like; in fact I haven't looked at them yet.

As I recall though, Mr. Speaker, from talking with ministerial planners and from reading the documents of the government, the government wanted a system which would meet a number of goals. It would, and this quote is specific, provide personal rapid transit service in off-peak hours. It would have a capacity in the intermediate ranges between the peak capacity of buses on existing arterials, and the maximum capacity of subways on their own rights-of-way.

Bus capacities run up to 6,000 or 8,000 people per hour; subways are at about 40,000 per hour. The minister wanted a system that would be designed to deliver up to 20,000 people per hour in a peak direction—in one direction. Mr. Speaker, the main contradiction in the government's plan arises because of the insistence on personal rapid transit in a system which also has an intermediate range of capacities of around 20,000 people per hour. And I will explain why.

The first thing is that if you are going to have personal rapid transit, then you want small cars. The ministry, I believe, specified a capacity of around 18 to 20 passengers; maybe a dozen sitting and half a dozen standing. You want those cars to travel, at times, individually or in very small groups; so they must automatically couple and uncouple. Because they will bypass stations, you want what is called off-line loading. Because the trains are relatively small, you need at least one extra platform at each station for off-line loading. It may well be that you need two or three platforms at each station in each direction for off-line loading, in order to handle the peak demands of up to 20,000 people per hour.

The switching must be on the transit car in order to allow the vehicles, which are going around like busy ants, to jog off the track, to jog back on the track, to jog off and to jog back, and to do it very quickly. You can't do it that quickly with on-line switching—that means switching on the track or the guideway—and therefore the ministry specified that the switching needed to be on the cars themselves, in the same way as you have steering on an automobile, rather than attempting to switch automobiles through ruts in the road.

The standards of safety in rapid transit must, of necessity, be infinitely higher than the standards of safety on our highways. In fact, I don't know whether the TTC has had more than one or two deaths every decade from accidents, if that—apart from suicides, for which it is not responsible. Those standards of safety must be so high that each and every transit car must be monitored or guided.

The ministry has spoken of computer monitoring or computer control of the cars. That means that every foot of every line must be monitored so that the computer knows precisely where each car is at any time. It is not possible simply to use a sophisticated block signal system, which has 75 or 100 years of history behind it and is an awful lot easier to work with, because the cars, of necessity, are moving so closely together. In addition, with cars carrying only 18 or 20 passengers, it is clear that—

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this bill is a bill to enable the minister to make agreements with municipalities or with private corporations. It has nothing to do with techniques of running public transit in any manner, shape or form. Would you kindly call the member to order, and have him confine himself to the subject matter of the bill?

Mr. Speaker: I think the point is well taken. I think the details in the agreement being worked out by the minister with the municipalities is not the principle of this bill. It could be referred to briefly but, really, to go into so much detail has nothing to do with the principle of this bill.

Mr. Cassidy: With respect, Mr. Speaker, the explanatory note to section 2 says:

The amendment authorizes the minister to enter into agreements with respect to experimental or demonstration projects, the design of transit systems and rights related to transit systems.

Mr. Speaker: But the details of those agreements really would have nothing to do with the principle of the bill which is may the minister or may he not.

Mr. Cassidy: I quite agree, Mr. Speaker, and I am not talking about the details of the agreements.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be too much detail to me; perhaps the member can keep more to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, as members well know and as the minister himself made clear, this bill is to give the minister authority to sign an agreement which will be worth $12 million, $15 million or $20 million—we don't know the amounts yet—for an intermediate-capacity rapid transit system.

The minister has tabled in the House copies of the specifications for the system. Section 2(2) of the bill again refers to agreements to provide all or part of an experimental or demonstration project. Implicit in the experimental or demonstration project referred to are the terms of reference to which the ministry is working and this, Mr. Speaker, is the only occasion, prior to signing the agreement, when it is possible to debate the terms of reference, the reasons or the way in which the ministry is going in.

I think the minister, Mr. Speaker, is aware that I have not yet referred specifically to the features of either of the systems being referred to. I think that the member for York-Forest Hill is quite legitimately in order in saying that were I to talk about Hawker Siddeley's proposal or Krauss-Maffei's proposal then I would be out of order.

The member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) says that even then I wouldn't be out of order. But right now, Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that this bill should provide for public review of the terms of reference under which the minister proposed the competition and following from which he intends to sign an agreement, because the terms of reference, in fact, were abortive and are creating or risking a real technological problem for the province.

We are going to be stuck with the minister's white elephant if he won't desist; if he won't hold back for a couple of months; if he won't consider the points I am making and that other transportation experts in this city and other parts of the province are beginning to make.

Mr. Speaker, I am trying to draw public attention, frankly, to the kinds of defects in what the ministry has been doing because I am gravely concerned about it. I think that's a proper function for me in my role as a member of this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker: I think your recent remarks are in order but I think you were getting into too much detail earlier. It seemed to be quite technical to me anyway.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, I realize—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): So what if it is?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I realize one has to be technical. The minister has got a technological fantasy on his hands and he is trying to endow it on the rest of the province for $1.25 billion. At times we have to engage in a fairly highfalutin' kind of debate in this House. I don't ask you, Mr. Speaker, to understand it all. If you will, I am really speaking directly to the minister, who has had the courtesy to stick in here because—

Mr. Lewis: It's a courtesy? He has to.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, he has to—I don't know, the way the Premier and other people carry on. There have been some noticeable absences. I am really talking to the minister because I think these are very serious points, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I can continue.

I mentioned a number of items, Mr. Speaker, which it seemed to me created exceptionally high costs and operational difficulties in the system as a result of the requirements of the minister that it both carry up to 20,000 people an hour and engage in personal rapid transit service, that is skipping stations in offpeak hours. The ones I mentioned were switching on the—

Mr. Singer: The member is still out of order.

Mr. Cassidy: I am just recapping so that nobody forgets where I was. The ones I mentioned were computer controls; automated operation; switching on the car rather than switching on the line; the use of small cars; and the capacity of those cars to couple and uncouple automatically.

What I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that firstly all of those features add enormously to the costs of the system. That is of concern to you, Mr. Speaker, as a member of this Legislature who is elected to office in order, among other things, to protect the taxpayer from the deprecations of a government such as this one.

Mr. Speaker: I think you should hold your details to a minimum. You may refer to them in general terms, but on the principle of the bill, does the minister have the authority, or is the House going to give him the authority to enter into the agreement or not.

Mr. Singer: We need someone to protect us from your deprecation!

Mr. Cassidy: With your tolerance, Mr. Speaker—and it is notable I might say by the way, that a few of the members of your party were concerned about the taxpayers' purse today—I am suggesting that you continue that revolution, that blinding flash of concern that you have had at least through to the end of this debate.

Mr. Bullbrook: The Speaker is neutral; at least it says so in the book.

Mr. Lewis: The devil he is!

Mr. Bullbrook: He has no party.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I don't believe it.

Mr. Cassidy: If I could engage the House and the minister in a bit of arithmetic right now.

The experts from one of the companies involved, and let's assume the other company would say much the same thing, stated at a seminar here in Toronto that with computer monitoring and all the other features that I mentioned, they can run their cars at 25 second intervals, or 25 second headways. Now since each of those cars will carry a maxi-imum of about 18 passengers, that means the maximum capacity of a personalized system is 2,200 persons per hour, or a quarter of the capacity of the Bathurst St. busline, or a sixteenth of the capacity of the Yonge St. subway.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I don't mind the hon. member, in fact it is rather interesting to hear his remarks, but just on that one point, sir, there are 20 passengers per car, seven cars in a train, that's 140 times 60 which is 8,400. If we get 30-second headway that makes it 16,800, or even better.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I still think that is too much detail. These matters will be discussed more thoroughly in the estimates of the ministry.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the point is though, that the estimates will not come to the House before the minister signs this agreement. Do you want to protect the taxpayer from the mistakes that your colleague and the government may be making, or don't you?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Keep the House in order!

Mr. Speaker: I just urge the member to keep away from too many details, stick to the principle of the bill, which is whether the House is going to give the minister the authority to work out an agreement with the various municipalities or firms.

Mr. Cassidy: Fine! Well the minister says, if I can reply to him, since he introduced it, that there will be seven cars per train and they will therefore carry 140 people per train maximum, and by travelling at 30 second headways that means they will carry up to 16,000 people per hour. He has not explained how they will carry 20,000 people per hour. Nevertheless, they will carry 16,000 people per hour.

However, what the minister has failed to state is the statistical chances, if even 25 or 30 people get into one of these 140-passenger trains at Malvern; the statistical chances, even in offpeak hours, that all of them will want to go downtown without stopping at a number of stations on the way. The chances, statistically, of that train skipping more than two or three stations on a 12-mile journey to downtown are very slight.

It seems to me incredible that the ministry would contemplate spending the amounts of money that are entailed in the various extra features in this system, in order that offpeak, occasionally, maybe after midnight, a few people—who are probably, let's face it, captive transit riders—will be able to skip a few stations and save a few minutes of time on their way to or from downtown. That is all that the ministry is achieving!

The estimates I have of the additional cost, without accounting for the technological risks of the sophisticated features the minister wants to put into the system, the extra features from the estimates I have, would amount to at least 40 per cent of the capital cost of the system, and a substantial amount of the operating cost of the system. That would be over a system, Mr. Speaker, which ran without switches, which ran the trains at close headways, but without off-line loading and which used the present technology or used new technologies which did not have computer-controlled monitoring, and where the automatic controls were based on a block signal system rather than computer-controlled monitoring—which, incidentally, I understand, has not yet been successfully tried in transit usage.

For that matter, Mr. Speaker—and I think this is the final technical point I want to make—the minister wants us to believe that seven-car trains carrying 140 passengers can travel at 30-second headways. He admits, or at least says in the statement, that in peak hours they will stop at every station; that they will be coming in and out of stations every 30 seconds.

It takes the TTC, Mr. Speaker, about 15 seconds to load and unload its subways. Presumably it will take something like that for this system as well. I will have some more to say about this when I consult some technical people about the actual stopping distances and so on.

But what the minister is proposing to do is to run these trains so close together that it will be like driving at 60 miles an hour 20 feet behind somebody else on a freeway. And the system will not have the failsafe capability to prevent the risk of multiple collisions with incredible loss of life and injury and property damage and obstruction to the whole system from that kind of rear-end pile-up crash—what do you call them on the freeways when you get 80 cars that smash up together? That is the kind of thing that could very possibly happen when you have trains which are coming into stations only five or 10 seconds behind the one that travels before it.

The minister himself has already said the maximum capacity in ideal circumstances is 16,000 passengers per hour, rather than 20,000 passengers per hour.

I would point out that headways on the Yonge St. subway are about two minutes and that nowhere in the world are transit cars run closer than at one minute headways. So what I'm asking, Mr. Speaker, is why this emphasis on all this new technology, when in fact it really doesn't yield an awful lot?

If you permit me being a bit technical again, you can't make a subway or a transit train go any faster by using new technology. The reason for that is that the maximum speed is dictated by the distance between the stations and by the tolerable degree of acceleration and deceleration that passengers will accept. I think the minister has probably learned that by now. The only way you can speed up the trains is by having the stations further apart.

New technology can possibly reduce noise, but there are also other means of reducing noise which may be equally as effective. In terms of protecting the public against noise pollution, Mr. Speaker, the most effective means is to get as much rapid transit as quickly as possible in order that it will take automobiles and other forms of private transportation off the streets—because they create far more noise than even the TTC subways that exist right now, or other existing transit technologies.

Specifically, again Mr. Speaker the minister's chief adviser did suggest some time ago that a transit system could be built for $5 million a mile; he had in mind a suspended monorail system—which in fact has now been rejected.

Systems can be built for $5 million a mile or less, but they would be in the form of light rapid transit—which is a much more adaptable and flexible system than the ministry has adopted. In fact, it was never even examined by the ministry; barely or not at all—I haven't yet determined which. But the whole idea of articulated vehicles, or the extension of streetcar technology—in which the TTC is so experienced—was never even examined by the ministry in any depth.

They kept on saying to the TTC: "Look, wait till we've looked at our technological wizard's recommendations. We'll look at those and then we'll come to you and talk about streetcars and light rapid transit technology." This is despite the fact that that kind of technology has been tried and is being proven, or has proven itself in something like 20 or 25 cities of Europe and of North America.

That is just my own belief, Mr. Speaker, but it's an aspect of the province's desire for transit sex appeal over effective use of the public's tax dollars in providing the best and most extensive kind of transit system at the least cost.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that another reason the government has gone off the deep end on this is that Malcolm Armstrong and some of the other pipe dreamers within the ministry have the idea that some day they will go to the ultimate personal rapid transit vehicle, a vehicle which will hold about two or four passengers, which can be parked in one's driveway, driven down to the guideway or transit rail, linked on to transit, taken downtown and then driven to the place of work. Now, doesn't that sound very much like an expressway right now? Can the minister really say how, in the year 2000 or even 2050, the guideways that he intends to make with this demonstration project we're talking about here, can be adapted to—

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the member permit a question?

Mr. Cassidy: Of course.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the member permit a question?

Mr. Cassidy: From the member? Any time.

Mr. Bullbrook: Is he, or is he not in favour of the government entering into agreements with corporations or municipalities as envisaged in this bill?

Mr. Speaker: I presume the comments are leading to that conclusion.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I am entitled to ask him a question. If he would prefer to let it—

Mr. R. C. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): That is much too difficult.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the member for Sarnia may be very interested to know that I'm not exactly sure, as a matter of fact. I may find out at the end of this speech, and that's probably due to the fact that the—

Mr. Paterson: Is the member listening to himself?

Mr. Speaker: That would be on the principle of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: On the principle of the bill, that's right.

I think in fact what we'll do, Mr. Speaker, if the member would like an answer and if the minister would like an answer, is, it's a Hobson's choice, there is a definite need for public review, and we will come in, I think, with an amendment to that effect during the committee stage of the bill. Frankly, we are torn between our support and endorsement for the principles of rapid transit and for the principle that we've got to take cars out of the city. We have to shift the balance far more than the government is doing right now, Mr. Speaker, from private expressway-oriented transportation in our cities, to public transit solutions for our urban transit problems.

Mr. Speaker, I drive in and out of Toronto frequently on my way to and from Ottawa, and on my way to other parts of the province, and I am appalled to see the amounts of money which are spent, sort of cached away in various governmental accounts for the widening, the doubling, the tripling, the quadrupling, of Highway 401 and the Queen Elizabeth Way and other highways—

Mr. Speaker: Speak to the principle of this bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, I'm simply answering the member's question.

Mr. Singer: Oh come on! This is not in the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Speak to the principle of the bill.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Can't you run this chair, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Cassidy: This is important, this is important!

Mr. Speaker, I have given a number of reasons why there ought to be public review and we will have a go at that. I would like to mention something else as well, though, and that is that the minister promised—and I don't know if I can find the quote here or not; no, I'm sorry, I can't find the minister's quote right here—but there has been a very definite promise of sort of maximum feasible consultation with municipalities which are involved about these experimental demonstration projects and about the ultimate choice of system.

One wishes that in public the minister would be clear about what really is the intent of the toy that he is going to build down at Exhibition Park. Is he coercing municipalities to accept the system, or is he giving them the freedom to use 75 per cent provincial subsidies in order to choose the kind of system that best suits their needs? I think the answer is the latter, but I think that we should have a clear reply from the minister about that rather than the kind of covert pressure mixed in with a kind of overt bonhomie and statements to municipal leaders and other concerned citizens that: "Well, of course, we won't insist that you buy whatever we put down at Exhibition Park."

You know, Mr. Speaker—and again this indicates the need for protection of the public on this particular bill—I am told that before the province has even decided which system it will have, before it has any clue of whether that system or the other system will work, before it has any practical experience in the cost of the system, that it has already undertaken planning for a line from Malvern to Union Station with the new intermediate-capacity rapid transit system.

This is beyond belief. The problem with the minister and the government is that this minister won't be in that office by the time that line is complete. I think he hopes he might be a few chairs over to his left, but he won't be there either. In fact he will probably be on this side of the Legislature at that particular time, if he is here at all.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): The member is dreaming.

Mr. Cassidy: But he is leaving a legacy with which future governments are going to have to contend, and it may well be a half-baked legacy, Mr. Speaker, which the public will regret.

If the minister and his people had talked with transportation planners in the city of Toronto or Metro Toronto they would realize, among other things, that lots of people don't want to go to Union Station. A lot of people want to go rather to the north of there, and that's not where the centre of the provincially proposed system is going to be. The province wants it to be right down at Union Station.

Maybe the province wants it down at Union Station to help its friends at Metro Centre have a good profitable development so they'll contribute a few hundred thousand more bucks to the coffers of the Conservative Party for the next election. That's been known to happen in the past. I don't know what to say to the minister about that. I'd like to say that he's above that kind of thing. He's certainly involved in it as a member of the government, whether or not he does it personally.

All the same, Metro Centre ain't where people all want to go. Lots of people want to go along Bloor St. They want to go along Eglinton Ave. They want to transfer, in a network which has some balance to it. If all the lines of the provincial system run down to Union Station, and if at the same time, the provincial priorities effectively suck dry the coffer of transit subsidies and therefore delay the Queen St. subway and the extension of the Bloor subway at either end, then there's a really severe distortion of transit priorities that will have taken place in this Metropolitan Toronto region as a result of the seduction of the minister to the technological sex appeal of new transit systems.

In other words, he's got to scrap a lot of that system. If he talks to TTC, who know their business, with great respect I would say to the minister an awful lot better than the minister does, and maybe who know the business an awful lot better than a lot of the minister's experts do too, because they've been in it for 50 years—

Mr. Speaker: Order please! This has very little, if anything, that I can see pertaining to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: I am arguing for the need of protection, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to raise some of the questions which need to be raised before the minister embarks on a decision which will then lead to a commitment by the government to justify the step the minister wants to take on May 1.

Whether it's Hawker Siddeley or Krauss-Maffei that the minister chooses, Mr. Speaker, he will feel committed to it. It's like somebody who gets married and after a year or two begins to realize that something is going wrong. At the same time, he doesn't want to admit that he's wrong and, therefore, he hangs in there and buys mink coats and diamonds and Cadillacs to keep the girl happy, if that's her particular bent.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Cassidy: That's what the province may be doing, buying diamonds and mink coats in transit terms for a system which doesn't really meet, particularly well, the basic demand in moving people from one place quickly, economically and conveniently. That's all I'm arguing, Mr. Speaker, that once they buy one they'll feel they've got to buy another. They can't go to the other system which was rejected in the first technological assessment, because if the system they choose doesn't work—

Mr. Sargent: If you allow that speech, you'll allow anything, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy:—then how much worse will be the one they rejected. So they'll be in a box, with planning already advanced on a number of lines. They'll feel maybe they can make it work when they get it on a real operational system, rather than on this toy fairground line down at the exhibition. The experience of Morgantown, West Virginia, Mr. Speaker, of which the minister is aware, is of a system that began costing about $3 million or $4 million and wound up costing, I've forgotten—was it $50 million? All it does is go three miles. If you press the right button you skip the intermediate station and you go from station 1 to station 3 with personal rapid transit. What a useless bowl of tripe that is, Mr. Speaker!

On May 1 the minister is going to sign—or he wants to unless he changes his mind or this House changes his mind—a commitment which will preordain 30 or 40 miles of intermediate-capacity rapid transit in the province, unless the system at the exhibition is such a total disaster that even the minister finally gets it through his head that he made a mistake.

I don't think the government would want to admit or would be in a position or able to admit at that point that it made a mistake, no matter how badly things were going. It will carve up the figures; it will try to argue that if the costs escalate there it's because it was new. The government will say it can save some money from mass production of the various cars and components. It will do all sorts of things like that and it will be a kind of fiscal duplicity worthy of the Treasurer when he was in the House today.

The government has already started that, Mr. Speaker. The Premier says it is $15 million a mile versus $30 million a mile or more for a rapid transit system. But the Premier was comparing an underground rapid transit system with the costs of a system that the minister and the Premier want to build, most of which will run above ground on elevated lines. The cost, Mr. Speaker, of an elevated subway isn't that much different from the cost of the system the Minister of Transportation and Communications wants to bestow on the province. It is also around $15 million a mile. We don't save that much.

The only real difference is that the minister's system will carry far fewer people. It may cost more per passenger and may possibly be more silent because it's elevated or runs on rubber wheels. One has to ask whether that benefit is worth it.

We are being committed, Mr. Speaker, to $1.25 billion or so—

Mr. Sargent: The member should be committed.

Mr. Cassidy: —on the system the minister chooses in the next 11 or 12 days. That's what the issue is in this bill and the minister will not back down. He's got that kind of stubbornness and pertinacity. If he finds out that the system is going to escalate to $2 billion or $2.5 billion dollars, he won't give up. Do members know what he will do first?

Mr. Bullbrook: They accused me of that.

Mr. Cassidy: He'll cut out the Finch line—certainly it is in one of the hon. member's ridings—which is decoration on the cake.

He promised 56 miles of line in Metro Toronto for, I think it was $800 million or $13 million a mile. About 20 miles of that 56 miles, Mr. Speaker, was a line that went along Finch Ave. at the very northernmost fringe of Metro and on the edge of zone 2 of the Toronto-centred region. In other words half of the catchment area for that line was the cows and the horses and the pigs and the stockbrokers who happen to live north of Finch Ave., just in stockbroker country there. I think the minister's political colleague, Steve Roman, is one of the people who live up in that area.

That line, Mr. Speaker, is expendable and we will still spend, I would predict, $756 million—or whatever the figure is—not for 56 miles but for, maybe, about 36 miles of line at a cost which would then be up to $20 million or $22 million a mile. In other words, as much as or more than the present cost of building subways on the ground or up in the air.

I'm not arguing for subways. I know that alternatives are needed and I have suggested one or two, and will suggest them further in debating and discussing this with the minister.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, the issue is not the spending; not the passing of a one-page bill. It is not even the spending of $15 million; it is the commitment to spend $1.25 billion on a system which I suggest is going to serve the province badly. That is why at the committee stage we will draft and will move an amendment which will call for a public review of these proposals and the terms of reference set out by the minister—that's where the contradictions arise, Mr. Speaker, on those terms of reference—in order that we can ensure that the ministry is not led down the garden path by departed experts, by rather vainglorious ministers and by premiers who are still inflated by the electoral results of the Spadina Expressway decision and somehow want to rediscover the magic they got from that particular decision.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York-Forest Hill.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister got a point out of the previous speaker's speech that unlike the Bart system of San Francisco, he had better make sure that every train has an automatic self-stopping device so that it can stop before it goes off the rails.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): The member should get one that gets him on the rails first.

Mr. Givens: I will try to confine myself to the subject matter in the principle of the bill without getting into technical matters.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, it's much more interesting if a member gets into technical matters, though.

Mr. Gisborn: More intelligent.

Mr. Givens: Not at this stage of the game. The member for Ottawa Centre just became intoxicated with the exuberance of his verbosity; he wasn't talking about the principle of the bill at all.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Very good.

Mr. Cassidy: If that's the case, it is a lesson I learned from the member for York-Forest Hill.

Mr. Givens: We hear a lot of claptrap around here but nobody is listening anyway.

Mr. Ruston: Very good point!

Mr. Gisborn: Come on, jealousy will get the member nowhere.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Speaker, I have very grave misgivings about this bill. It seems to me that what happened on this bill was that the minister was sitting around with the boys, his advisers in his department, and he wanted to have the jurisdiction to sign agreements. They said: "Well, what kind of jurisdiction do you want?" He said: "Well, let's have it wide open."

They went ahead and they drew up a one-page bill that will have everything in it but the kitchen sink. The reason I have great forebodings about this bill is because it is so wide open, and it has room for a tractor-trailer or a truck or a team of wild horses to run through it.

If this is to be a bill which will confine the jurisdiction of the minister to sign agreements with a municipality or a number of municipalities with respect to the intermediate-capacity system, I may be prepared to go along with it. But this bill does not confine him to the intermediate-capacity system. It will permit anything under the sun, and I think that is wrong. I am not prepared to buy that all at once in one little one-page bill.

There is a wonderful thing about promoting and conducting experiments. As any high-school boy can tell you, you can conduct any experiment you want under the sun. It can be a controlled experiment; you can run choo-choo trains all over the face of your living room. It is when you get into operations, when you get the darned thing out on the street, and when you get it out on the rails and you operate it under proper conditions, that the rub comes. This is where you are able to determine whether the thing will work or not.

It has never been clear to me how the government is going to run this experiment down at the Canadian National Exhibition and simulate, for instance, conditions of snow and storm and sleet and so on; how the system will be interlined at the Canadian National Exhibition with the subway system on the Bloor-Danforth line, or the University line, or the Yonge St. line; or how an intermediate-capacity system can interline with the Yonge St. system when it is crying out now.

Talk about making an agreement with the municipality! The minister should have authority to make an agreement with the federal government. He went up there hat in hand like a mendicant and beggar to ask the federal Minister of Transport to give him a dual system so that he can twin Yonge St. Yonge St. has reached the peak of its capacity now and within another year or two it is going to be absolutely paralyzed.

I am concerned about this bill because I think it gives the minister too much for what he requires. It isn't confined to the intermediate-capacity system and it opens up a whole can of worms which we are going to regret very much in the future.

Under section 87c(1), it talks about how the minister and a municipality may enter into an agreement. Does this mean an agreement with each other? Does this mean that you can have an agreement between one municipality and another municipality? This doesn't make it clear to me at all.

As far as having the right and the legal authority to make an agreement, this government, of all governments, has made it only too clear that the agreements aren't worth the paper they are written on. No agreement was more strongly worded, more hidebound and signed by more ministers, such as Mr. Goodfellow and Mr. MacNaughton, than the agreement having to do with the Snadina Expressway and rapid transit system. It was torn up the way Hitler tore up the Versailles treaty—just like a scrap of paper, without any consultation.

Mr. Singer: Charlie couldn't stand it and he left and gave up his seat.

Mr. Givens: The Premier didn't call the mayor of Toronto; he didn't call the chairman of Metro.

Mr. Singer: That's why Charlie left.

Mr. Givens: He didn't consult with anybody. He came in here as is his wont at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He had told them at a bunfeeling down at the Royal York that he was coming up to make an announcement. At 2 o'clock, an agreement that had been in the making for about 15 years was torn up like a scrap of paper.

So whom is the minister kidding, that he wants to have the right to make an agreement with a company? If the Prime Minister of this province can tear up an agreement with a metropolitan corporation of over two million people, what can he do with an agreement with a company or a corporation? He probably would be afraid to tear up an agreement with a company or a corporation, which is probably more to the point.

Mr. Ruston: Yes, he needs their finances for his election campaign.

Mr. Givens: But he openly defied and he flouted the agreement which took 15 years to bring to fruition, because under the Constitution of Canada he has the right to do this under section 92 of the British North America Act.

Mr. Singer: Shame!

Mr. Givens: So, what great moment is this, The minister asks here for authority for himself to make an agreement with a municipality. What about cities like Toronto or Ottawa—I don't know what other cities have public transportation systems like Toronto's. This bill completely overlooks an authority like the Toronto Transit Commission. What is the position of the Toronto Transit Commission under these circumstances, which is under a provincial charter and is charged with the responsibility of running the public transit system of Toronto? Why should that not be included here? Did the minister intentionally intend to overlook the TTC in Toronto or any other public transit authority in any other city?

Another weakness in this bill is that the tender system is completely overlooked, and they are going to put themselves in the same box as they are doing with the Hydro building and other buildings that have been talked about in this Legislature. I think the tender system should be inviolate; it should not be departed from under any circumstances, unless there is an absolutely compelling and overwhelming reason why the tender system should be done away with.

Mr. Singer: I don't think we can vote for this. Have they got the bells working again?

Mr. Givens: We have a situation where only two companies are competing, and both are foreign firms. If we get ourselves locked into an agreement with one of the firms, how are we ever going to change it? How are we ever going to amend the situation that we got ourselves into?

I say that under these circumstances, where billions of dollars will be involved and the province is committing itself to 75 per cent of the cost or is going to be a three-quarters partner, the tender system must be written into this agreement if we are going to give this minister the right to make any agreement at all. Otherwise, it is left open to all kinds of chicanery and horsing around, and I think we have had enough of that. Justice not only has to be done but has got to be seen to be done, and the only way we are going to do it is by putting the tender system into this bill.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right!

Mr. Givens: Another thing I want to bring up about this bill is the right of the minister to make an agreement with a municipality and a firm or corporation. What's become of the desire expressed in this Legislature about Canadian content and Canadian technology? The other day a couple of us were watching television, and the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea)—there he is over there, with a nice cherubic smile—was saying what a wonderful thing the provincial government was going to do; that it guaranteed, in the public transit system that it was going to put into effect in the cities of Ontario, that Canadian technology and Canadian content would be supreme; everything was going to be done to see that Canadian content and Canadian technology would be carried out to the letter of the agreement.

Mr. Singer: What could be more Canadian than Krauss-Maffei?

Mr. Givens: Where is Canadian content and where is Canadian technology in this bill? Why isn't there a subsection here saying that when an agreement is made by the minister and a municipality, or by the minister and a firm or corporation, particularly a foreign firm or corporation, that Canadian content shall be observed to an extent of 80 per cent, 90 per cent or 100 per cent—take any arbitrary content level you want, but I think it should be written in here; otherwise the minister is committed to nothing. I think a bill like this, which commits him to nothing and which is so wide open that one can drive a tractor-trailer through it isn't sufficient as far as I'm concerned and as far as this party is concerned.

Mr. Singer: Right!

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): It's okay. I'll watch him.

Mr. Singer: The member agrees, does he? He'll watch him. Come on, the day of the car is over.

Mr. Givens: Now section 87c(2) says that the minister may enter into an agreement with a firm or corporation "to acquire, hold, exercise, develop, license, sell, lease or otherwise dispose of . . ." Over the heads of a municipality or the Toronto Transit Commission? Nothing is said in here reserving the rights of properly constituted authorities that are in existence today to have any form of review or to do anything once this agreement is signed. The province can do anything it wants.

One of the most perilous things that I envisage in this bill, Mr. Speaker, is that by virtue of this simple, common, ordinary, everyday, garden variety bill—which looks like a caretaking bill, merely giving the minister the right to sign agreements—the minister is creating a parallel transportation force, which I think is going to be viewed with alarm in the not too distant future.

All of a sudden the province is propelling itself into the public transportation business where it has no right to be and where it shouldn't be, because it is not going to solve the transportation problems of all the cities, be they big or small, in the Province of Ontario with this intermediate-capacity system. You have to have a balanced system of public transit.

Anyone who can get on TV and say the day of the motor car is over, when we have just got through selling over a million motor cars in the Province of Ontario—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Who would say something as irresponsible as that?

Mr. Givens:—and we have a registration of about one car for every three people in Toronto—you still have to have a balanced system between the motor vehicle, the truck, the dial-a-bus, the reversible lanes. There are 50 kinds of combinations and permutations and variations with respect to the public transit system.

Is the government suggesting that the province is going to get into the integrated business of public transit completely? It can't get into part of it, Mr. Speaker. It cannot get into part of it without getting into the whole and unless it is prepared to take over the whole ball of wax—for example from the TTC, in Metropolitan Toronto—then it has no business getting into this business of experimentation under Bill 93.

There are people who get up and talk about how wonderful the metropolitan city of Toronto has developed. It has developed because no one stuck his nose into the developing transportation system of Metropolitan Toronto until two years ago. The TTC was the ultimate authority and it is the only authority in this province that knows what it is doing public transit-wise. It is the only one that has had any experience. The guys in the minister's department haven't had any, and anything that they have learned they have learned from the TTC because there was no one else to learn from.

They went to Hawker-Siddeley. They went to Krauss-Maffei. And even those cities where these companies are haven't adopted the technology of those particular companies. They are not running their systems there.

I say that by virtue of this bill—this little innocent bill—where the government is permitting the Minister of Transportation and Communications to sign agreements with municipalities and with private firms and corporations, the government is constituting a parallel authority in public transportation and I say it is going to rue the day. It is going to be in it up to its ears.

The government is prepared to pay 75 per cent, but then it is going to hear the squawks from the areas of this province outside the big metropolitan centres, from the farmers and the miners. They will wake up to what has happened with the Spadina thing, where the government has undertaken to pay 75 per cent of the cost, and realize that they now are going to be paying 75 per cent of every nut and every bolt and every screw that it puts into the city of Toronto. I won't take that analogy any further than that, but the minister knows what I mean.

They are going to wake up to what it is to pay 75 per cent of the public transportation systems in the big cities and they are not going to like it. The government is getting into something right over its ears, but as the previous speaker has said, by that time the minister will have gone from the scene and he will be either Attorney General or more likely the Treasurer and the Minister of Economics.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A backbencher again.

Mr. Singer: Maybe he will be back in law practice. Spadina will beat them at the next election. The Toronto votes won't save them.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Speaker, I say Bill 93 is very serious and very dangerous. The minister can label anything an experiment or a demonstration project—he can build a whole line. When the intermediate-capacity system goes in you can build a whole line down the Nordheimer ravine and the Cedarvale ravine, and call it an experiment, because the first line will be an experiment, notwithstanding what goes down at the midway of the Canadian National Exhibition.

Is the minister suggesting that he should have the power to sign an agreement where he can "acquire, hold, exercise, develop, license, sale or lease or otherwise dispose of rights" related to that whole line, costing tens of millions of dollars, just on his say-so, or on the say-so of whoever his successor may be?

Mr. Singer: The member has convinced me.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is very dangerous. It has not been properly thought out. We haven't had an opportunity to think about it and I don't think the minister has had an opportunity to think about it. All he wants now is the right to grab hold of everything, because he has been told by his leader that before the 1975 election comes around they have to do something spectacular, even if it is only on paper, and they want to have the right to carry on this experimentation.

Mr. Singer: And Cam McNab is getting a few qualms too. He wants a job. That's what happened.

Mr. Givens: I tell the hon. members this is very, very serious. The more I think about it, Mr. Speaker, the more I believe that the minister shouldn't be given this authority, unless he at least puts in a section having to do with the matter of tenders—that any acquisition, holding, exercising, developing, licensing, selling or leasing or otherwise disposing of, has to be on the basis of the tender system — and that Canadian content and Canadian technology has to be supreme. Unless those two amendments are put in my party and I will certainly not vote for this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill, obviously.

Mr. Singer: Why obviously?

Mr. Cassidy: The member supported something else, obviously, when it first came up! This is a bad bill.

Mr. Drea: Obviously I would have to support it if the only opposition to it came from the antediluvian forces in the rather affluent northern or northwestern part of this community.

Mr. Singer: Ho, ho, ho!

Mr. Drea: Ho, ho, ho to you too!

Mr. Singer: Try that once more.

Mr. Drea: Obviously I would have to support the bill when most of the opposition appears to come from the antediluvian forces from the wealthier areas of the north and northwestern part of this community.

Mr. Cassidy: Does he mean they oppose public transit?

Mr. Drea: What was that? I didn't hear that.

Mr. Cassidy: Does the member mean they oppose public transit?

Mr. Drea: That's right; of course they oppose public transit.

The reason they oppose public transit is that unfortunately, and much to their chagrin, probably the worst form of public transit that was ever devised by man—the Spadina Expressway—was killed. Had the Spadina Expressway not been stopped it would have meant the rather orderly destruction of the downtown core of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Singer: Oh dear; oh dear! I can't stand it.

Mr. Drea: Well, I have the unique honour of finally having driven the member out.

Mr. Sargent: When does the member's book come out?

Mr. Singer: Tell us about the day of the automobile having gone.

Mr. Drea: The day of the automobile, as a form of rapid transit or transportation to or from work is over and every thinking person knows that.

Mr. Singer: Yup! General Motors knows it; Chrysler knows it; Ford knows it.

An hon. member: And the member for Downsview knows it. Tell that to all the workers.

Mr. Drea: The workers. Quite frankly, there is still a very great market for private automobiles. And the market will be increased and enhanced by the fact that people no longer have to wear out their vehicles and themselves for two hours a day going to and from work in a rather unsafe and unsettled condition on highways.

But to come back to the bill.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): Less pollution too!

Mr. Drea: To come back to the bill, I am obviously in full-hearted agreement with this and I can say to the House quite frankly that it is from a position of vested interest, because after the demonstration project proves successful—and I have every confidence in the ability of Canadian brains and Canadian technology to make the demonstration project successful—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Drea: —the first priority goes to the borough of Scarborough.

One of the interesting things is, and again the antediluvian forces used to heckle me a little bit on this, as I used to say that all that Hydro right-of-way in Scarborough was not being used to its fullest potential and that it was a great source of community wealth.

As I say, I speak from vested interest, because the first priority goes to building this intermediate-capacity transit from the borough of Scarborough right to downtown. I congratulate the minister, because this is the first time the eastern part of Metropolitan Toronto has ever received a first. So as I say, I speak from vested interest, but above all I also speak—

Mr. Cassidy: It may not work!

Mr. Drea: —as somebody who is rather enamoured of the fact that Canadians really can overcome many of the so-called insurmountable difficulties in urban life; and not the least of these right now is transportation. The inability of government to cope with rapid transit has led, in many jurisdictions, to the utter demise of the core of the city. That is one of the fundamental reasons why the downtown areas in the United States are fully and almost completely deserted once working hours are over. Their whole system has been laid out for rapid egress, by automobile, to the suburbs. Of course this, consequently, leads to urban sprawl; and it is already leading to suburban slums in the first ring built after the last war.

So what we have here is the determination that we will enter into agreements which will allow us to go forward in a rather practical way to take the prototypes from England and from Germany. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I wish there was a prototype from Oshawa or from Oakville or from Windsor or from American Motors in Brampton. But the fact of the matter is that up until this time there hasn't been any research done on this particular problem in Canada.

The research is being done in more crowded countries. It is being done in England, it is being done in Germany and, to a lesser degree, in the United States.

If you look back at the original Toronto subway—the original form of rapid transit in this city—all of the technology came from England. Even as late as the second stage, the University subway, a great deal of the technology came from England.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the very talents that produced the tunnels on both the Yonge St. and the University Ave. subway—even the workers, by and large—had to be imported from England, where they had been working on the tube system there. We didn't even have the basic labour technology.

But, as we have expanded the Yonge St. subway and the Bloor-Danforth line, there has been more and more Canadian participation in the actual physical construction. There is certainly more Canadian innovation in the subway design, because the cars are not only bigger now, they are lighter, and therefore they consume much less energy. So that we have progressed from the original system. Far from being dangerous, this bill seems to me the only practical way of doing business.

I really wish that the member for York-Forest Hill had stayed around. If memory serves me correctly, the member for York-Forest Hill was rather active in municipal politics when the first Yonge St. subway was built. One of the difficulties the Toronto Transit Commission got into on that occasion, Mr. Minister, was the law said the TTC virtually had to pay for the subway itself out of current revenues. This put it behind the eight-ball. That's why there has been such a slow evolution of subways in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

It is only when the province got into the game—and all of us here are old enough to remember when there was a subsidy for highways, but nothing for rapid transit. And then all of a sudden we started getting subsidies and grants for rapid transit. This, I suggest to you, is when rapid transit took off in Toronto.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): That was only last year.

Mr. Cassidy: Even the member for Scarborough Center is old enough to remember that.

Mr. Drea: Yes I am.

Now we are into another situation. Perhaps the conventional form of subway is too expensive for a municipality like Metropolitan Toronto, or a province like Ontario.

One of the benefits of the intermediate capacity is that it costs less. Because it's a smaller system, it doesn't have the great waste that unfortunately there is in off-peak hours on the conventional type of subway. It is much more geared toward a 24-hour or even a 16-hour-day operation than are the big Yonge St. or the Bloor-Danforth subways, which have a peak of approximately two hours in the morning and in the evening—unless there happens to be some kind of particular event.

Now then we come to those who say that this is dangerous; it is going to erode the powers of the Toronto Transit Commission; it is going to erode the powers of the municipalities; it is going to set up the minister as some kind of tsar over every type of transportation in Ontario.

What is the alternative? Do we go to the poor Toronto Transit Commission and say: "Get into the intermediate field, boys, spend your money?" It has a difficult enough time now doing things on its existing surface and underground routes and keeping its money—

Mr. Cassidy: It has been making proposals for years and years—on deaf ears.

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): Dry up!

Mr. Drea:—and trying to come to the point where it doesn't have to increase fares and deter people; without being told: "Now go and find yourself $10 million, $20 million or $30 million some place and experiment." If we did that, the TTC would laugh us out.

Mr. Singer: Would it?

Mr. Drea: Far from being dangerous, it is much more practical to build a test line where the system can function under Canadian conditions.

May I throw it back to the members across the floor—it was their friends in Ottawa who made the fatal error with the Turbo train. It may have been great in the United States and somewhere else, but it couldn't stand the Canadian winter—and this set it back three, four, even five years. It is a perfectly acceptable form of transportation, provided the bugs are worked out—and that's precisely what this bill empowers the minister to do.

The responsibility for transportation in this province now belongs to the province. Not one of the members over there says that the province should get out of the high-way business. Far from it—they want the province into the transportation business. How many letters from southwestern Ontario are sent here because the railways do not operate there any more and they say why doesn't the province take over? They don't suggest that little Palmerston take over the CNR line or the CPR line that's been abandoned. No, sir. They say to the province and the minister, "Why don't you take it over because they need transportation?"

To suggest that all of this money is going directly to benefit the people of Metropolitan Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa is sheer and utter nonsense. By being able to build an intermediate capacity line, after proving and getting the bugs out of the prototypes, it will cost us about one half the amount of conventional subways and that means there will be far more funds available for the type of transportation that is needed in rural Ontario or in small-town Ontario, because they want highways, they need bypasses, they need certain improvements on the roads.

If we were to put the money at the 75 per cent level into building more conventional subways in Toronto there wouldn't be enough money left over for rural Ontario. So once again, far from doing all the terrible things that he is supposed to do, all this bill is an orderly attempt to bring in—

Mr. Sargent: Get to the point.

Mr. Drea:—what the people want, a new type of rapid transit system that they can afford, that will not be a further heavy drain on existing land, because after all we are going to use land that is already being used as a form of a transportation corridor because it is carrying energy. So, having listened to all of the arguments, I still cannot understand the type of mental activity that goes into saying that the minister is part of some kind of a conspiracy to finally erode the power of the municipality to provide its own transportation needs.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): His whole party is a conspiracy.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, as I have said before that the day of the automobile in transit to and from employment is over, I will give them another one and they can talk about this one for a while. The day of the municipality by itself, even a regional municipality by itself, being able to deal with the transportation problems of the future, is not only over it has been over for about 10 years, and unfortunately far too few of us have recognized that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy: What has the government been doing then? What took it so long?

Mr. Sargent: The member for Scarborough Centre should be in the front row.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, Bill 93, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act, is designed specifically to alleviate some of the traffic problems in Metropolitan Toronto. If we give carte blanche authority to the minister—

Hon. Mr. Carton: “Carton” blanche?

Mr. Stokes: —“Carton” blanche—to enter into an agreement with a transit authority, it would mean that between $2 million and $3 million could be expended on an agreement with a municipality “to sell, lease or otherwise dispose of all or any part of the experimental or demonstration project related to public transportation.”

“Otherwise dispose of” is the thing that bothers me in this bill because, coming from an area of the province that is sparsely populated, we don’t have the problem of transporting huge numbers of people in a relatively short period of the day and the inherent congestion and the dislocation of people that there is in Metropolitan Toronto.

We are aware that there are a significant number of dollars going into a project such as this when we feel that perhaps the transportation priorities of this province and this government should be elsewhere.

It seems to me that you are going to have to have some kind of regional development plan to restrict the kind of development that is to take place in Metropolitan Toronto in order to cope with the mass transportation of a large number of people for relatively short periods throughout the day. We would have hoped that there would have been more emphasis placed on spreading out the industrial activity and the need for a high density of people—such as Metropolitan Toronto—to other areas of the province where we don’t have this problem of congestion and the problem of transporting a large number of people.

I am particularly apprehensive about this bill, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it is conceivable that this minister, once he gets finished with his experimental project, will turn it over to some other authority such as the Canadian National Exhibition. It will be a showpiece that will add greatly, I suppose, to the attractiveness of the Canadian National Exhibition. There is no doubt that it will bring even more people into Metropolitan Toronto, thus adding greatly to the transportation problems that there are in this city.

I think it could even compound the problems that there are at the present time rather than alleviating them, notwithstanding the fact that it could create some employment if the government went for the English system whereby Hawker-Siddeley might get the contract. It could very well mean providing badly needed jobs in the Hawker-Siddeley plant in the city of Thunder Bay. Of course, we welcome any intimation from the minister that that will, indeed, be the case—that it will provide greater job opportunities in the north as has been the case with the construction of subway cars for the TTC. I believe some of the GO Transit cars were constructed up there.

I am a little bit apprehensive about the authority that will be vested in the minister to dispose of it otherwise. If he is going to realize a profit or break even, fine and dandy, this is the wise use of funds. But as an outright grant to one particular segment of the province—I wouldn’t be so harsh as to say it is discriminatory against the north—it seems to me it is the kind of thing that doesn’t take into account the transportation needs of many other areas of the province. Those areas could never aspire to this kind of treatment or the treatment as announced in the recent budget statement whereby 75 per cent of the cost of urban transportation will be underwritten by the province and the taxpayers of this province.

I think the minister is well aware of the needs of Highway 17 in the north. In many areas there is a need for construction of passing lanes and upgrading existing facilities. There is a need for upgrading Highway 11 between Beardmore and Geraldton. There is a need for a connecting link between Highway 17 and Highway 11 between Ignace and Atikokan, a mining town that is going to be in deep trouble in the next few years if some alternatives aren’t provided for development.

In the recent study of transportation needs in the Kenora-Rainy River districts of northwestern Ontario, I think it was brought home quite clearly to this ministry that there is a need for greater transportation facilities to open up greater utilization of resources which those areas have in such abundance. I am thinking particularly of mining, forestry and the tourist attractions they have in such abundance. They are now inaccessible because of an inadequate network of roads.

I am thinking, too, of the Gull Bay-Armstrong road which a civil servant of this province has been travelling on a regular basis. He has a car that is less than a year old and it is just ready for the junk heap because of the driving conditions on the roads between Gull Bay and Armstrong and Highway 599 between Savant Lake and Pickle Lake. There are so many needs in the north with regard to transportation.

I'm just a little apprehensive, if the minister is going to put the greater percentage of his transportation expenditures in a relatively small part of the Province of Ontario—and I'm speaking geographically—that he is just going to compound the problems that are already in existence in Metropolitan Toronto and a lot of the urban centres.

I would have hoped that instead of spending more dollars to move an ever-increasing number of people in Metropolitan Toronto, this government could be coming up with programmes that would disperse people throughout the province on a more even basis. It would alleviate a lot of the problems that we have here at the present time—the high cost of land assembly, pollution concentrated in relatively small pockets of the province.

A lot of these problems wouldn't manifest themselves if the government had a realistic Design for Development programme. There is nothing in the Design for Development programme for the Metropolitan Toronto region that would indicate that this is the direction in which the government is going, and this bill seems to be ample evidence that it is just compounding the problem, rather than trying to come to grips with it.

Those are things I wanted to say about this bill, Mr. Speaker. I hope that before this bill gets final reading and approval from this Legislature that the minister will look at the overall transportation needs for the people in the Province of Ontario. Perhaps if he does that he will amend this bill and come to the conclusion that the dollars that he's speaking of in this bill could be much more wisely spent by dispersing them throughout other areas of the province where the priorities are just as great as, if not greater than, they are in Metropolitan Toronto.

It says: "to design, develop, construct, test and operate all or any part of a transit system related to public transportation"—any place in Ontario. And: "to acquire, hold, exercise, develop, license, sell, lease or otherwise dispose of rights related to all or any part of a transit system related to public transportation."

What could be wider? What could be more dangerous than to say: "Give," not just to this minister but anyone who would follow, "these powers"? And the minister is compounding; he doesn't do it with just one area, he does it with all the areas of the province.

We've watched this "Godfather" complex enter into every area of government and I don't think that there is a better example of a splendid public servant in this House than the minister I am talking to. I can't believe that he would want this type of legislation and these kinds of powers. I would say that if he were to have the implementation, the control and the security of this, I would be glad to give it to him personally, but he won't be here very long.

I am saying it is dangerous to put a law on the books, because it is so hard to remove them. How many times in this House have we removed laws? We just keep adding them on and on.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, everything has been said very ably by the member for York-Forest Hill, but I'd like to put a few points in here to the minister.

We know now, Mr. Speaker, after 10 years in this House, the way that the government—not the minister, the government—uses government contracts for political purposes and I would suggest to you that this is a very, very dangerous piece of legislation. It has unlimited powers.

I don't believe for a moment that this insidious bill is the minister's idea. I would suggest to the minister that this is possibly the senior civil servants in full flight. It smacks, I believe, of the beneficent dictatorship that we have been watching along here so long.

It gives the minister the power to enter into an agreement with a firm or corporation—it is that wide—to provide all or any part of an experimental or demonstration project related to public transportation—and that covers a whole gamut of projects and millions of dollars of contracts in net supplies—without tender, on the proposal system that we have heard so much about and that the government is so proud of.

Mr. Ruston: We removed a tax today.

An hon. member: That didn't get in.

Mr. Sargent: That's democracy in action. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is another Canada Square type of deal, that this is a much bigger ball game than $180 million for Mr. Moog, the friend of the Premier. I suggest that this is another form of the proposal system the minister is asking us to support. My basic training in government is that we worked on the low tender system. It's the bible of all municipalities across this province, and this senior body is telling municipalities, in effect, that the low tender system isn't important any more. Whatever happened to the low tender system? When did we start disposing of it? It was only in the last few years when the government wanted to enlarge its election fund coffers. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this opens up unlimited possibilities to allow corruption. The member for Scarborough West—

Mr. Drea: Centre!

Mr. Sargent: Scarborough Centre, I'm sorry! In a very able manner he put his case. The complete stupidity of this government can be seen by flying over this area in a small aircraft, not fast, but slowly, to see the two big arteries along the north and south going east and west, to see the Don Valley over here and Highway 27 over here, and to see the Spadina starting down the centre—and boom, she stops. It's complete stupidity. This is part of the powers that these people have. He talked about the wisdom of the Spadina. Ask any taxi driver who does much driving in Toronto, "What do you think of the Spadina?" and he will say "You have all got rocks in your head."

I think if the minister is looking at transportation—I say that in capital letters—across this province, if he looks at it objectively he should be ashamed. He should be ashamed of the setup we have in western Ontario. We have no rail system, no GO train, no dayliner in or out of Owen Sound to serve all the beach areas, Walkerton, Paisley, and the whole area on the west side of the peninsula up there. That's blocked off. All we have is a highway. We have no airline system; we have nothing. These are the things I suggest to the minister.

A study in the States after many, many thousands of dollars came up with this answer in the area of transportation. What we need in America, and we are part of the American scene, what we need today, are short-term solutions, not long-term Buck Rogers types of things, like the minister was overseas on.

All of a sudden one day, Mr. Speaker, they decided they had to get off their butts and do something about transportation. So what happens? The minister and his cohorts, in a few days' notice find themselves over in Europe looking at these things. They take their movie cameras along with them to watch all this, to publicize all this hocus-pocus and to let the people think they are doing something about transportation. The minister is not kidding us. We know that that's a long, long way off. What we need in this province—and the minister should be ashamed about what's happening here in Toronto on this transportation—are short-term solutions.

Nothing is happening up in our area at all. It takes you a day and a half to go from Port Elgin or Southampton to Toronto. One must change bus after bus to get down here and back, and that's ridiculous. I sincerely hope that the minister won't talk Toronto all the time; that's all we hear down here — Toronto.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Perhaps the members want to hear so much about it.

Mr. Sargent: They spent $20 million on the University subway here, and what do they do but close it down at 5 o'clock every day because it doesn't take in enough money to pay the ticket takers.

Mr. Drea: No, no. Nine o'clock.

Mr. Sargent: They close it at 9 o'clock now?

An hon. member: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, they must have been worried about the members sitting, or something. But that subway doesn't take in enough money to pay the ticket takers, and it cost us $20 million.

An hon. member: That's why they're building the Spadina. They're looking for customers.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Dial-a-subway.

Mr. Sargent: I suggest to the minister —

Mr. Good: That's what we need: a dial-a-subway system.

Mr. Sargent: If the minister presses the button and puts this legislation through, it will be the most dangerous thing to happen in the area of corruption in government, because no minister should have the right to make these unending deals with unlimited powers. It's very dangerous legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak to this bill?

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I'm a little puzzled as to why we've got this bill here at all. I would have thought, at first glance, that under the Highway Improvement Act, or perhaps under the general powers of the ministry, that the minister would have this power. However, my colleague from Sarnia and I entered into a great, long and legal discussion and he suggested to me that perhaps there was a legal opinion that indicated the Highway Improvement Act didn't go quite that far.

Mr. Bullbrook: I gave credit where it was due.

Mr. Singer: All right, perhaps that's the reasoning behind this bill. Well, if that be so, Mr. Speaker, then I wonder where the department got the power and the authority to spend the money for the studies it has done to date, for the trips to Europe, for the movies, for the engaging of experts and so forth. It would seem to me that if they haven't got the power to do what they're asking here, then they didn't have the power to do what they've already done. I don't know how many millions of dollars they've already spent, but I would suggest that it is a substantial number of millions of dollars, because the kind of presentation they have put on, the expensive kits, the making of movies and so forth wouldn't come too cheaply.

I don't think it would follow that if they need new legislation to give them the power that they're asking for here, that they could have done what they did before legally. I don't think they can have it both ways. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the government either has acted illegally before or if this bill is before us with good reason, then I think McCarthy and McCarthy, who I believe gave the opinion, if they have properly earned their retainer, probably are just gilding the lily a bit. And perhaps, Cam McNab, having had his fingers burned once or twice, would like to see it in black and white that he's got authority to go out and do this.

I've been very puzzled, Mr. Speaker, as to what goes on in that department. I guess we know that Charlie MacNaughton left in disgust when he was repudiated—the Treasurer should have gone this afternoon when he was repudiated—but I'm puzzled as to how people of the very substantial ability of the senior advisers in that department can sit through the planning and commitments they made and suddenly do this bold about-face. And for what purpose I don't really know. The legalities of this interest me, Mr. Speaker, and I'm dubious: Either we don't need it now or we needed it long before they got into this brand new experiment.

I share completely the views of my colleague from York-Forest Hill when he expresses grave doubts about the kiddy-car rides that will be provided down at Sunnyside. That's really all we're doing. We're going to embark upon an experiment, the work of which has never been proved anywhere in the world, let alone in the place where it apparently originated. This Krauss-Maffei firm are building and experimenting; and they've sold someone here a bill of goods which they haven't been able to sell in their own native country or in their own native city, where millions of dollars are being spent on forms of public transit that we have recognized here. They have come up with a variation, and the department has suggested a variation on a variation, and now we are going to pay them to experiment further here at the Exhibition on a basis that no one is quite sure about.

If it was so good, or if it had any real merit, surely countries like Germany, and/or Japan, and/or some of the other expanding and industrial countries in the world would have gone ahead with this. But no, to make a new image for the Davis government and to create the Premier himself as a man of decision—it really doesn't matter—we just open the Treasury vaults and spew out the millions of dollars and there we are: We are being brave; we are being bold.

Mr. Speaker, I'm puzzled too about the time sequences. It gets very peculiar because a member gets more, really, out of reading newspaper accounts than he does out of what the minister tells us in the House. As I understood it, if this contract is going to be entered into, one could expect that maybe by the end of 1974 we would have something running on a track around the Exhibition grounds. If it wasn't running by the end of 1974, it might not run until the summer of 1975.

That would take us successfully into the next election period, and then I'm sure all the good people from the western part of Metro—because by this time we are going to have such chaos in moving traffic at all west of Yonge St.—all the people in the western part of Metro probably could dial their buses and go down to the Exhibition grounds and see something roaming around on a track in the summertime at the Exhibition—if it was ready in the summer of 1975.

If it is ever proven, when it might in fact work on the ground or in the air—Is it a man, or is it a beast, or is it an airplane? I don't know. It's Carton, I guess, that's coming—

Mrs. Campbell: Superbus!

Mr. Singer: When anyone is going to be able to use it as a method of getting backwards and forwards from somewhere, I don't know. Really, Mr. Speaker, the whole thing is a ludicrous sham. One really has to wonder how a group of apparently intelligent men who have a great responsibility—they are spending $7.3 billion — and who make the odd serious mistake like putting a seven per cent tax on energy which is withdrawn to mighty hurrahs and great applause, can get involved even in their wildest inanities in this kind of kiddy-car nonsense and pretend that it is a transportation solution.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: I can't see this bill at all, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister should withdraw it. I think he has already assumed he has the power to do what the bill asks him to do. Either he has assumed that and spent money properly, or else he has spent a lot of millions of dollars illegally and the opinion of McCarthy came a bit too late. Charlie should have asked for McCarthy and McCarthy before he left.

Mrs. Campbell: Who, Charlie McCarthy?

Mr. Singer: So Charlie McCarthy should have asked—yes, that's the joke.

I can't see this bill; I think it's a mistake. I think the minister should do like the Treasurer—not resign, because the Treasurer has no intention of resigning—

Mr. Givens: Just withdraw it.

Mr. Singer: Just withdraw the bill and let's get down to more serious and important business.

Mr. Givens: Come in with a proper bill.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): An Act to provide the Minister with a Blank Cheque for a White Elephant.

An hon. member: Very well put.

Mr. Deacon: But I think after hearing my colleague from Downsview I think that should be a blank cheque for a kiddy-car line.

The need for public transit has been well discussed everywhere. But one of the major problems has been the failure of the ministry to ensure co-ordination of transportation for people to provide a similar service as a car provides to people—that is, a door-to-door service with integration of rail, subway, bus, streetcar and dial-a-bus, so all these things are co-ordinated.

We have the CNR, CPR, TTC, Gray Coach, Voyageur, Travelways — all sorts of organizations in the transportation business—but not one of them is co-ordinated with the others. Here we are providing yet another separate authority. The province has its own transportation—the Ontario Northland is subsidized, as is the GO Transit operation that the CNR runs for us—but at no time has this province taken seriously its responsibility and its opportunity to co-ordinate a door-to-door public transportation service. The Metro-centred fiasco reflected, in the planning there, the failure of this government to ensure that every project we undertake today provides us with an improved co-ordination of door-to-door public transportation.

The way this should be done in Ontario, I feel, is to ensure that the province has, by means of its grant system and by its agreements with other levels of government, the power to co-ordinate such a service.

For example, in air service we have the opportunity to take Air Canada or Transair or some other service from one point to another when we travel by air from one part of the province to another or from one part of the country or from other countries. We don't have that in rail, not really, because basically we don't have common facilities that others can use to provide competitive services.

For example, the Ministry of Transport provides the Malton facilities, controls traffic and ensures the co-ordination of traffic under its own direction and that of its traffic controllers. It ensures a standard of service is provided, and that there is safety in the type of aircraft. That is all done under the federal Ministry of Transport.

The same thing applies in operation of our water transportation system. But it doesn't do that for rail, so that we have this multi-discipline, this multi-level of government control which has caused the continuing lack of integration and resulted in the continuing failure of public transportation to compete with the private automobile.

I suggest the bill is going in the wrong direction. It's not providing a facility which will enable this minister to ensure there is competition in this new, this added mode of transportation. It's not providing us a means whereby this province can co-ordinate this service with the existing services that we now have.

I also am fearful that in providing and drafting the specifications for this scheme, the government has told the experts what it wants. It wants a little line that it can test and play with, not one that is going to really serve a purpose.

Surely the government recognizes the danger of that; what it builds here should be enhancing Ontario Place and the CNE grounds for the very great number of events that can take place there. Therefore, it should be a line that goes right into Union Station terminal and the subway station terminal, in some way connecting with existing facilities. Certainly Union Station would be the place for that to take place.

It should be a line of a design that provides for other than the particular contractors favoured here building and providing equipment. It should be of the type that we are sure will be able to be co-ordinated with other transportation facilities that we now have.

I am very concerned about the type of structure that is being projected. An experimental model, as my colleague from York-Forest Hill mentioned, can be a most dangerous way to move in this matter, because we all know how often the experiment doesn't really prove out when it comes to the operation itself. Just last year one of our major mining industries, Falconbridge, had to write off $50 million because its experimental model in the production of iron ore didn't work out, and it actually built the plant. It poured millions after millions of dollars trying to make the thing work and it just didn't work.

One cannot base the future intermediate type transportation mode we are now hoping to develop over the next few years on a kiddycar line, as my colleague from Downsview described it, around the CNE. It must be something that is working and providing a functional role in our total transportation network.

Again I support the views that have been expressed by each of the members of this party—that in the way this bill is drafted there is no provision for tenders. There is not going to be an open opportunity for any organization which wants to provide this facility to compete fairly and to be sure there are no favoured cousins which get the special deals.

We don't want to have any further scandals in this province and this minister is one, I am sure, who is as anxious as anyone to avoid such a charge. But when he asks us to pass legislation such as that in this bill today, he is opening the way for the public to suspect him of the same things that they have been suspecting—and had good reason to suspect—of his colleagues. I therefore support my colleagues and urge all others to oppose this bill strongly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, as far as this particular bill is concerned, I would like to make a couple of observations, some of which may have been made before.

We have first the provision that this government may enter into agreement with a municipality. An agreement by itself normally indicates that one has two people who thoroughly understand that about which they are in agreement. I would ask the minister if he would tell us at some point what knowledge the municipality has had to date about the proposals or about the specifications which this government has placed before certain interests? I think they should at least be aware of what, if any, dangers are inherent or may be deemed to be inherent in this form of transportation which is suggested in this bill.

I wonder if they understand the decisions which appear to have been made already, Mr. Speaker, about the type of switching system that could be involved in an agreement under this bill; and whether they know what safeguards ought to be available to protect their public as well as the public of the province.

The municipality, it is quite true, has not had the funds to be able to proceed with an overall transportation plan such as it ought to have in any large metropolitan area. I don't dispute the necessity for the provincial government to enter this field, but I do have very serious concerns when the government is inclined to enter into something and to force agreement, if you like, without full disclosure to the municipalities as to the ramifications of such agreement. This, of course, is my primary concern.

I am also naturally concerned about the type of agreement that is contemplated by this government in entering into agreements with firms or corporations. Would the municipality, for example, be a party to any of these agreements and to what extent? That isn't spelled out.

As to the disposition which is inherent in this bill, what would the effects of this be if this experiment shouldn't work, and what happens if there is in fact a tragedy as a result of this experimental operation because we had predetermined the specifications for it?

I would like answers to those sorts of questions, because I don't think any responsible person can approve this kind of legislation as proposed without having those very real questions answered and answered unequivocally. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to repeat the various arguments that have been made against the bill. I think that the minister should now be aware that the bill, for practical purposes, is so flawed that he should withdraw it.

I can well assume that if the House were to grant authority to any particular minister it would be quite prepared to grant and extend that confidence to the Minister of Transportation and Communications, but when he brings before the House for a limited purpose a general bill which is going to be embedded in the statutes for all time and asks us to vote for it, in an area where costs are unknown, where it is avowedly an experimentally designed system to relieve a transportation problem in Metropolitan Toronto, it doesn't seem to us that we should grant the minister that authority.

If the bill had been limited for the purpose which has been outlined by the minister to provide that kind of intermediary capacity experimental prototype that has been spoken of in the assembly, then I think we could go along with the granting of that authority. I think we would have linked the authority to have been exercisable by the minister subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, but we are not prepared to grant this kind of continuing ongoing authority by permitting this section to be incorporated in the governing Act of the ministry.

It seems to us that the minister himself is ill advised to request this kind of extensive authority. If there is one area in which we are all concerned about government these days it is in the question of costs, and we know very well that if the minister has this ongoing authority to enter into agreements in the future we can be faced with being required to vote sums of money in the estimates of his department year after year because of agreements which the minister has entered into on his own authority and his own responsibility. We are just not prepared to do that.

The other reasons which have been given, of course, we adopt. The question of the requirement of a tender and the other points which have been made all appeal to us, but the principal point is that there is a limited purpose and the minister has introduced a general provision in a general Act of the Legislature to cover that limited purpose, and we think it is much too broad and gives the minister far too great authority. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, we will oppose the bill on second reading.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to this bill before the minister?

The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to cover the points that have been made by the various members.

First, I would point out that this particular search for a new mode of transportation of intermediate capacity has been going on now for some three to four years. It didn't happen just within the past year or two. There was research made of all the various components and there are hundreds of components that would be available. These were examined. And, of course, what one must do is not only get the particular components but put these into a system, and that is what is being done through this demonstration project. The various components themselves have in fact been tested, and successfully tested, in other parts of the world.

I happen to be a very cautious person. One has to question one's own ministry officials, which I did. One had to listen to their particular persuasive arguments, but even that did not satisfy me and I engaged two firms of outside consultants in the transportation field — the leading transportation consultants in Canada. I had them do an independent study and they came up with the same suggestions and recommendations as my ministry officials.

Mr. Cassidy: But which the public has not seen.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Apart from that, when I was on my trip relative to visiting the three successful contestants — and mind you, the evaluation from the eight down to the three had been going on for some time—when I visited the three the respect and the admiration that the particular people that I questioned had for the ministry officials was just first rate. I had one of the senior officials—in fact, the senior official — of one of the largest companies in England tell me that the British government themselves were on a hunt for an intermediate capacity system, and he had advised them to go to the ministry officials for the Province of Ontario to find out how to go about this particular search.

I think one just has to look at the red book that is in the possession of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, which I tabled today, and look at some 100 pages of specifications to realize the expertise that has gone into this particular search. And then to have the hon. member for Ottawa Centre stand up and tell me that he can criticize the technology — I'm not blaming him for criticizing what we may be doing, but to criticize the technology is beyond my comprehension.

You know, when the members get into these technical aspects—for example, let me give them one indication. Telecommunications is a field that I also have very little knowledge about, although it is part of my ministry. So often, so many times, I kept hearing technical phrases and technical words. Because of this I took it upon myself to try to memorize what telecommunications really meant. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that of all the experts in the field, I doubt there are very few who can come up with the definition of telecommunications?

Telecommunications, very basically, is the transmission, emission, reception of signs, signals, writing, images or sounds or intelligence of any nature by wire, radio, visual or audio-visual system. Which simply means people talking to people.

So, Mr. Speaker, all I can assure the hon. members of this House is that I have approached this with a very conservative—not necessarily Progressive Conservative—but a very conservative and very cautious approach.

The hon. member for Ottawa Centre mentioned by name, Malcolm Armstrong, who was head of our research department. He neglected to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that he was promoted as chairman for the federal government of their agency dealing with transportation. He is now the chairman of the transportation development agency—the top position for the federal government in research. They took him from us, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: Maurice Strong pulled that trick with the federal government, leaving disaster after disaster behind him.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I would also mention that the region of Ottawa-Carleton is very interested in this new mode and, in fact, has asked for an appointment with the minister and the ministry officials with a view to getting on with it. So, I would point out to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre that his own particular people are interested in this for the city of Ottawa.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Tell 'em they can't have it as long as the member for Ottawa Centre is there.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, the reason that we have been dealing with technical people thus far is simply because it has been a technical search. To answer the hon. member for St. George, we have had, as I mentioned earlier, the four technical people from the Toronto Transit Commission, the acknowledged experts in the technical aspect. Incidentally, Mr. Patterson, who is without doubt one of the leading authorities on urban transportation on the whole of the continent, is an avid fan of this particular ICTS.

I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, as I did earlier, that this particular legislation is enabling legislation. It is enabling the minister to enter into a contract. The funds will be voted during my estimates. The members of the House will be able to question me at that time; they will be able to question my officials if it's in committee.

I would point out that I think there is one misconception among the members about this bill that perhaps is through lack of an explanation on my part. It would be impossible for us to sign a demonstration contract per se with either of the two companies without at the same time tying down the technology, because it's the technology that is important.

If we signed a contract relating only to the demonstration at the Canadian National Exhibition, then where would we stand when we came to have these particular systems put in our municipalities? We could be held up, Mr. Speaker.

So very simply, very basically, this province is garnering in the rights, the patents, the know-how, the technology, in order that this will be part of our whole system. We are purchasing those rights and patents and all that goes with it. We, in turn, will have parts of the world to which we can export this particular technology on perfection. So, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the reasons that we are having this bill brought in at this time.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Speaker, will the minister yield for a question?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Givens: Is the minister willing to let this bill be confined and limited to the intermediate capacity transportation system? Is that what the minister is saying in his most recent remarks?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, there are other matters involved, and I will deal with that later.

I would also point out that we do not intend coercing municipalities so far as a system is concerned. We will make this system available to the municipalities. The 75 per cent subsidy, which was part of the formula that was brought in by the Premier last November, relates to urban transit. And as the hon. members know, particularly those from the city of Hamilton and the city of Ottawa, the municipalities have already taken advantage of this, much to their great surprise at that time.

For example, I believe the city of Ottawa had purchased or leased buses and was wondering whether in fact it would be eligible for the 75 per cent subsidy. It was pointed out that it would, and this is in fact what has taken place in the city of Ottawa.

The city of Hamilton, likewise, was able to take advantage of it, even though the time limit had suggested it might not have been able to do so.

Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the members keep talking about a kiddy-car system. I mentioned at the outset the numbers of individuals and the expertise of the individuals who have been involved in the search for an intermediate capacity transit system. Without doubt, these are the experts in the urban transportation field on the continent and, in fact, throughout the world. These are not people who are looking for Mickey Mouse rides, as has been so often mentioned about the system at the Canadian National Exhibition.

Mr. Cassidy: But there were acknowledged experts who designed the Spadina Expressway, too, and they were wrong.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Well, I am glad the member for Ottawa Centre mentioned that. As a matter of fact, on the Spadina there is one thing that I have always wondered about. Incidentally, I keep hearing about the Spadina day in and day out; rarely does a day go by that I do not hear it.

There is one thing, Mr. Speaker, that I have always meant to ask those who perhaps knew more about it at the time that it was done—and the hon. member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) has just left the room; and I think that she would know a great deal about it.

The thing that has perhaps made me wonder about the Spadina Expressway since it was stopped, is why in fact was it stopped by Metro council in 1969 for a review by some of the very people who are criticizing the fact that the Premier stopped it on an appeal to the cabinet. It was stopped by Metro in 1969 because they had doubts about it. They must have had doubts about it, or they wouldn't have stopped it.

Mr. Givens: Not the subway system. The minister keeps on mixing the two deliberately.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the Spadina Expressway.

Mr. Givens: What about the subway system? Why did the government go ahead with that?

Mr. Roy: The government spent $150 million before it stopped it.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the opposition in so far as the tendering system is concerned, but I would point out that in fact this has been done on a tendering system. We had eight companies with technological know-how who were given these particular specifications and asked to make a proposal. Surely that is a tender? Surely that is not going out to your friends and saying, "Put in a bid."

How many companies throughout the world would be able to put in a tender on a proposal like this? I suggest to members that any of the companies in the world which wanted to could have tendered on the particular specifications in this booklet, that we have here.

I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, that in fact we do have in the contracts clauses to the effect that the Canadian content will be between 70 and 85 per cent. This is, in fact, written into the contracts. I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, one of the—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —hon. members pointed out that the minister and a municipality may enter into an agreement to provide or otherwise dispose of. It was the member for Rainy River (Mr. Reid); he was concerned about it.

Mr. Cassidy: It was the member for Thunder Bay.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Cassidy: We wouldn't get anything that substantial from the member for Rainy River.

Mr. Roy: Words of wisdom.

Hon. Mr. Carton: What this does, Mr. Speaker, is, if there are parts of this demonstration project that cannot be utilized, it enables the ministry to otherwise dispose of them. I think that makes abundant good sense. If there are parts that we are not able to utilize after the demonstration, I think it makes abundant good sense to be able to dispose of them.

While I am talking to the hon. member for Thunder Bay, I would remind him that in the ministry at this time we are spending about $1.2 million on Highway 599. We are looking at the Fort Frances to Dryden road. We are going to start that, as the members know. Insofar as the air service in northwestern Ontario is concerned, we are reaching conclusions.

Mr. Speaker, the minister is well aware of what is happening in Thunder Bay. He is very interested in what is happening up in Thunder Bay and the whole of northwestern Ontario for that matter—and the whole of northern Ontario.

Mr. Drea: The minister gives them too much.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I am sorry that the member for Grey-Bruce has gone out, Mr. Speaker, because he mentioned that really we never did anything in particular for his riding. I might tell you, sir, that after I came to this ministry I had a delegation from his area relating to the Tobermory ferry, which had been discussed for some seven years. I said I would resolve it and I resolved it within six weeks. We are spending some $13 million in the riding of the member for Grey-Bruce.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): He wouldn't say thanks for anything! Members have to get the minister in the right circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the member for St. George, the TTC could not be involved in this kind of demonstration project because there are no fares being collected and therefore no revenue. They would not and in fact have not the funds in order that they—

Mr. Cassidy: No fares?

Hon. Mr. Carton: At the Exhibition.

Mr. Cassidy: This is a revolutionary concept. The minister might try it where people like to travel.

Hon. Mr. Carton: To the member for Downsview, who has since departed, I would point out that we do, in fact, have the power to spend research funds, which is what we have been doing. That is why we need this bill to carry on now that we have done our research. We need the bill to get into the contract signing stage. To the member for Downsview, the timetabling is, has and will be—

Mr. R. B. Beckett (Brantford): He is not here.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I realize that. The timetabling will be that the demonstration project at the Exhibition will be operational in 1974, operate through the 1974-1975 winter and be operational at the 1975 Exhibition. People will be well able to ride and have a demonstration on this particular project long before a certain event which has been imputed to me.

Mr. Givens: Nobody goes down there in the winter. Nobody is there. One could shoot a cannon through there and not hit a soul. It's a Toonerville Trolley.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I think, Mr. Speaker, I have covered most of the points in the time. As I mentioned, I do want to have this bill passed in order that I might be able to sign the contracts and make the announcement by May 1. On one hand, we are being criticized for not proceeding—

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is going too fast and he is not satisfying this side of the House.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre with all due respect in the question period says: "Why aren't we getting on with the timetabling?" and "You were going to announce it." Then I come up and say, "We are announcing it on May 1." Now we are being criticized for going too fast.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: What more do they expect?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I simply conclude, Mr. Speaker, by asking all hon. members to vote in favour of this bill and put Ontario where we are in the other fields, in the vanguard of all jurisdictions insofar as transportation is concerned.

The House divided on the motion for second reading of Bill 93, which was approved on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 48, the "nays" are 25.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to: second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Mr. J. Riddell (Huron): Point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Just a minute! Is it committee of the whole?

Hon. Mr. Carton: If they want it, yes.

Mr. Speaker: Well it was not unanimous for third reading, so it is up to you to direct where it goes. Committee of the whole House!

Mr. Riddell: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I notice in the Votes and Proceedings, No. 22, that my name is spelled "Riddle"; I wonder if this time, with the recorded vote having been taken, my name could be spelled "Riddell". The pronunciation is correct, "riddle".

Mr. Speaker: We will make sure it is.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

APPENDIX

(See page 1177)

An answer to a question was tabled as follows:

5. Mr. Cassidy: Inquiry of the ministry: Is it government policy to exclude books relative to the law from the libraries at Don Jail, Carleton Regional Detention Centre and other Ontario correctional institutions? If so, why are prisoners denied the right to learn about the law under which they were jailed; and when does the government intend to reverse this policy?

Answer by the Minister of Correctional Services:

It is not the ministry's policy to exclude books relative to the law from libraries in correctional institutions. All superintendents of regional detention centres, jails and correctional centres have been issued copies of the Criminal Code and have been directed to make the Criminal Code available to inmates who request to examine it.

It should be noted that regional detention centres and jails function primarily as short-term institutions. The main need of inmates in these institutions would appear to be for professional legal advice relative to their individual cases. This is available through the inmate's own lawyer or through legal aid. The ministry's view is that a person should be encouraged to make use of available professional legal advice rather than to try and prepare his own case. If an inmate does not have his own lawyer, he may apply for legal aid.

Posters explaining how to obtain legal aid are posted in inmate corridors.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

House in committee on Bill 93, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. Chairman: Bill 93, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act. Are there any questions, amendments or—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: May I finish, please? To section 1 of the bill?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I hate to flog this but I fail to see how we can prevent—

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Chairman, excuse me, section 1 is just repealing another section.

Mr. Sargent: I'm sorry.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I think probably you will go along with section 1 and your point will be on section 2.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 1 stand as part of the bill then?

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Section 2, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Carton: On section 2, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to subsection (2)(b).

Mr. Chairman: Subsection (2)(b). Is there anything before subsection (2)(b)?

Mr. Paterson: Yes, under section 2, the introductory remarks, I move that section 2 of the bill be amended by adding after the word "section," the following clause numbered "(1) After public notice of a call for tenders" and that the item marked (1) be now numbered (2).

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Sounds very sensible to me.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, if I could speak to this amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment. Mr. Paterson moves that section 2 of Bill 93 be amended by adding after the word "section"—

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): After what?

Mr. Chairman: After the word "section" the following: "(1) After public notice of a call for tenders," and then the present No. (1) be renumbered No. (2).

Mr. Sargent: Speaking to the amendment, Mr. Chairman, if I may—

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, if I may on a point of order, could you tell me exactly where in the amendment is the insertion of the words?

Mr. Chairman: As I see it, it says that section 2 of the bill be amended by adding after the word "section"—you will find the word "section" in the second section, the second line—it is a new subsection (1) really, which reads as follows: "After public notice of a call for tenders." And that the present No. (1) be renumbered No. (2). Any comments on this? The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: The member for Essex South should speak first.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, I think most of the debate was carried this afternoon but we in our party feel that contracts of this nature, wherever possible—and we feel that in this instance these types of contracts and contracts in the future—should be called by public tender rather than by invitation.

An hon. member: It makes good sense.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in support of my colleague from Essex South I cannot underline too much the importance of the fact that hereafter all contracts between municipalities and this ministry will have this stamp of approval—that no tender is necessary. It opens a door so wide that what can happen scares me. The minister, as we mentioned this afternoon, will not always be in charge of this ministry and so from here on it's a wide-open door. I cannot understand the minister allowing this thing to happen, knowing his record in public service. It's an insidious thing; it's so powerful and dangerous. It's going to undermine our whole municipal control across the province insofar as tendering on contracts is concerned.

If you allow this bill to go through, in effect you're saying to municipalities that tendering is no good any more. The proposal system, as the Tories in Queen's Park want it, is the ongoing thing now, the yardstick. I think it's so serious I implore the minister to put the safeguard on it, to please consider the fact that we put the safeguards on for the future, because you know and I know, that we never, never come in to repeal these laws. It's on there for a lifetime. I think you'll open the door wide to corruption that we've never seen before.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, would you explain to me where that amendment will appear in the original bill?

Mr. Chairman: I really think, if the mover would allow me, that these words are meant to be inserted in the present subsection (1) before the words, "The minister." In other words, that subsection (1) starts out with: "After public notice of call for tenders, the minister and a municipality may—"

Mr. Gisborn: Will it be part of 87c? That's what we want to know.

Mr. Chairman: Is that right?

Mr. Paterson: That will be acceptable.

Mr. Chairman: This isn't self-contained in itself.

Mr. Gisborn: It doesn't make sense, though.

Mr. Chairman: It may make more sense in there.

Mr. Singer: The minister is a very reasonable fellow.

Mr. Chairman: Is that clear?

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, it's clear.

Mr. Chairman: So really, subsection (1) would read: "After public notice of a call for tenders, the minister and a municipality may enter into an agreement to provide—" No, that doesn't make sense either.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, that still doesn't make sense, but I think we all get the point, which is that without any public call for tenders the minister is being authorized to select and enter into agreements. Without being too refined about the wording of it—

Mr. Singer: Rough and ready politics.

Mr. Renwick: —I think there's some merit.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The principle stands.

Mr. Renwick: I know what the minister's answer is. I'd like to move on to another point in connection with that clause. Why is it that the minister, dealing with a specific proposal related to the Metropolitan Toronto area and an experiment in that area, wants to have an ongoing, continuing authority in the bill? This is one of the major points that bothers us about the bill. Can the minister give us his answer as to why he wants a wide-open authority when he is always talking about a limited proposal?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I pointed out that I have an amendment to subsection (2) which I think will answer the member's question. We're dealing now with subsection (1).

Mr. Renwick: I want to deal with subsection (1). This is a wide-open authority from now on for the minister to enter into an agreement with any municipality across the Province of Ontario. My understanding is that what you're talking about when you're speaking about an experimental or demonstration project related to public transportation is the one which has been the topic of the discussion and the proposal. Why does the minister want an ongoing authority to enter into an identical agreement, or a different agreement, about this kind of a project with any municipality across the province?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that presently we have in legislation exactly what you're saying I should perhaps not have in future. We do have that now in legislation. It has gone through the Legislature in the following words: "The minister and a municipality may enter into an agreement to provide an experimental or demonstration project related to public transportation."

That has been the law for the past number of years. That is, in fact, the law as it stands to date. That was the law that enabled us to have the dial-a-bus demonstration in Bay Ridges, the demonstration project in Sudbury, and the dial-a-bus experimentation that will take place in the northern part of Toronto. It is under this legislation which is presently in the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

We repealed subsection (5) which read as follows: "The minister and a municipality may enter into an agreement to provide an experimental or demonstration project related to public transportation." It was wide open. The only words that were added were: "or to sell, lease or otherwise dispose of all, or any part of." As I explained this afternoon, the reason we wanted those words added was, in fact, that parts of the demonstration project at the CNE may not be able to be kept or utilized, and we want to be able to dispose of them. So, basically, Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member is taking exception to, is what I know has been the law and is the law as it stands today, until that section is repealed.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): I wonder if the minister might answer why he would not accede to what appears to be a very sensible amendment to this legislation. I heard you before, on the debate earlier in the day, and you mentioned the fact that there was really no problem because you and your red book—unfortunately I never saw the book, but in fact you have had a number of companies which have tendered on this project and slowly you are working down until what you are left with is one, two or three companies left in the whole process.

Mr. Singer: He started with three, he's down to two and he's going to accept one.

Mr. Roy: Yes, well you mentioned I think eight or so companies, and I appreciate that in that field you are somewhat limited in the number of companies which can participate, but the point I want to emphasize is that this piece of legislation does not limit you to having this track around the CNE. You can have all sorts of other experimental projects going on which you have not had tenders for, where you might want to experiment with some other companies. That is the point that concerns us.

We appreciate what you are saying about the fact that in this project you've got possibly two companies in mind, but this legislation does not limit you to what is going to go on for 1975 or whatever year it's going to happen—apparently 1975—in relation to that project and that's what we take exception to. We've seen abuses in the past. It's not as though we are trying to raise a red herring here. We've seen abuses in this field in the past, not necessarily in your department but in other departments, and we're saying that the taxpayers of this province are entitled to the best deal possible and this is why we suggest the question of public tenders.

I think the member for Grey-Bruce makes a good point as well, because you are in fact the minister and this government has been trying to encourage municipalities to be competitive, to have tenders, to get things going to try to save the taxpayers money, and here you're prepared to enter into or accept a piece of legislation which does not call for that.

If the minister was able to assure us here today that this piece of legislation limits him to one project at the CNE I don't think we would have much objection. But this is a blank cheque, so to speak, to enter into all sorts of agreements. Surely the minister must realize that the amendment my colleague brought in is a very sensible amendment.

I don't see any objection. I can't see why the minister would not accept this really, very frankly, and I think the member for Grey-Bruce has made a good point. We might be able to trust you but maybe you won't be around that long. You know, 1975 is coming on and the way things are going you might not be around after, so I suggest to you that if we are passing legislation in this House we should try to pass the best possible legislation.

We are trying to co-operate. We are all in this together, so why not accept our amendment?

Mr. Chairman: Any other comments or questions on this amendment? The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I can only—and I think it makes as much good sense as the proposed amendment does—iterate that there were literally hundreds of components that were examined, that any company could have made a submission, that in fact eight companies did make submissions, that in fact—

Mr. Sargent: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. The hon. minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, I will accept the question.

Mr. Chairman: All right. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: I still don't see why we should put all-embracing legislation on the books of Ontario forever to suit this one plan. We are in favour of what you are trying to do but don't give us blanket legislation.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): You voted against the legislation.

Mr. Roy: Don't talk. You don't even understand it.

Mr. W. Newman: You voted against it this afternoon. Don't you forget it.

Mr. Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Sargent: We are in complete agreement with what you are trying to do but don't tie us down forever to a blank-cheque deal. I think you will appreciate what we are trying to say.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): You fellows will remember that for a long time.

Mr. Roy: That's history.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I can only say again that there is no way this could now be put out to tender. I think that anyone with any common sense—and I think you all have that common sense—would agree that there is no possible way this could now be put out to tender. This has not been done secretly. From the time that we instituted this particular demonstration project, from the time that we got into this, the world has known that we are trying to find a new intermediate-capacity system.

Mr. Singer: The world didn't know it until you made the presentation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: Do you not agree with me that this legislation does not limit you to entering any agreement on that red book of yours?

An hon. member: No.

Mr. Roy: You are not limited to that, that's the problem.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, again I come back to the fact that there is legislation presently on the books of this province—

Mr. W. Newman: Two wrongs don't make a right.

Hon. Mr. Carton:—and this was passed by this Legislature, that says the minister and a municipality may enter into an agreement to provide an experimental or demonstration project related to public transportation carte blanche. And that is the law.

Mr. Roy: We don't want any more of that!

Hon. Mr. Carton: That is the law.

Mr. Sargent: It is wrong; it is wrong legislation.

Mr. Chairman: Order please. Order please.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, that has not been abused; and it has been on the books for five or six years. We have brought in the demonstration of the dial-a-bus project, which is a tremendous success. We have brought in the GO Transit system, which is a great success. Let's have a few pluses for this particular ministry.

Mr. Sargent: But this is for all over Ontario, though.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question?

All those in favour of Mr. Paterson's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

I declare the motion lost.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. Newman: You stand alone.

Mr. Sargent: You've left the door wide open. You can do anything you want to do now.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order please. The member has had his opportunity.

Mr. Sargent: The minister can just keep on doing what he's doing. Great stuff.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order please. Any other comments, questions or amendments before section 87c(2)?

Mr. Paterson: Is it possible, Mr. Chairman, to move another amendment to that section?

Mr. Chairman: No, you didn't amend any section. You were attempting to add to it and it didn't carry; so there is no section changed or carried.

Mr. Paterson: So that can't be added to?

Mr. Roy: Yes, but he wanted to make an addition.

Mr. Chairman: No, I didn't say that. If you want to talk about subsection (1), you are in order.

Mr. Paterson: Right, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to add after the word "transportation," which is the last word in subsection (1), the words "in the intermediate-capacity transportation system."

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Okay. Confine it to that.

Mr. Singer: Very good.

Mr. Roy: This is going to come back to haunt the minister.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Paterson moves that subsection (1) of section 2 of Bill 93 be amended by adding after the words "transportation" the words "in the intermediate-capacity transportation system."

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, this is an attempt to confine this legislation to the specific proposal at hand, which has been spoken about this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments? The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I come back to the point that under this particular legislation, which is presently on the books, we can now have demonstration projects relating to dial-a-bus, GO bus or whatever we may want, and we have not abused that. To take away that right and limit it only to the intermediate-capacity system would mean we wouldn't be able to have any more dial-a-bus projects.

Mr. Paterson: We don't trust your successor.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Ottawa, for instance, wants a dial-a-bus demonstration project. The member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) isn't in his seat right now, but were he here I think he would want us to be able to enter into a dial-a-bus demonstration project with the city of Ottawa. We need this to be able to do other things besides the intermediate-capacity system.

Mr. Sargent: Why can't you tender for it?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Ready for the question?

Those in favour of Mr. Paterson's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it. I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Sargent: Like a bunch of sheep.

Mr. Givens: You weren't even listening.

Mr. Chairman: Now, any comments, questions or amendments to subsection (2)(a)?

Mr. Paterson: Yes, I'd like to move an amendment to subsection (2)(a) after the word "corporation" in the first line, which now reads, "The minister may enter into an agreement with a firm or corporation . . ." I would add to that, "and that Canadian content and Canadian technology shall have prime consideration in any such agreement."

Mr. Sargent: That's like motherhood. What does the minister think about that?

Mr. Givens: Vote against that.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Paterson moves that subsection (2) of section 2 be amended by adding after the word "corporation" the following words, "and that Canadian content and Canadian technology shall have prime consideration in any such agreement."

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, we certainly accept the hon. minister's explanation of this afternoon that it was his intent in this particular instance to have approximately 70 per cent Canadian content in these enterprises, but it says nothing about any future development, such as in the case of Ottawa or other areas that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications may enter into. We'd like to have this assurance enshrined in this particular bill.

An hon. member: Right.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, that is always the prime consideration, so I accept the amendment.

Some hon. members: Hurrah!

Mr. Chairman: We had better put it to the House then. Shall this motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Chairman, that motion has been carried? Okay. That's great.

Mr. F. S. Miller (Muskoka): Go on, stand up and talk against it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, the flexibility of this government should go down on the record for today, April 24. I think this is incredible.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I have some amendments as well. I apologize to the minister for coming in a minute or two late.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. On which section?

Mr. Cassidy: On section 2, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: To (a), (b), or (c)?

Mr. Cassidy: Pardon?

Mr. Chairman: To (a), (b), or (c)?

Mr. Cassidy: As a matter of fact, mine all came in under new numbering—(3), (4), (5) and (6).

Mr. Chairman: Just a minute now. We aren't quite that far yet. We are still dealing with section 2.

Mr. Cassidy: That is fine. I just wanted to put my claim in, Mr. Chairman, that's all.

Mr. Chairman: We have carried up as far as subsection (b) and I believe the minister has an amendment to subsection (b).

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I thought the member for York-Forest Hill made a good point this afternoon. I might point out there was never any intention for us to get into a transit system competition with anyone else, and the way that subsection reads I think that could be the interpretation. I move that section 2 of the bill be amended by adding in subsection (2)(b) the word "demonstration" after the words "part of a," so that the section will now read: "to design, develop, construct, test, and operate all or any part of a demonstration transit system related to public transportation."

Mr. Chairman: Shall this motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything on subsection (c)? Then the member for Ottawa Centre has new sections to add.

Mr. Cassidy: I know that you will accept these amendments as being in order as far as the House is concerned. I am just getting them copied right now and the page will be in in a minute with them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Oh well, we'll wait for you. How long are you going to be? Ten minutes?

Mr. Cassidy: The first one, Mr. Chairman, is that section 2 of Bill 93 be amended by adding a new section, subsection (3)—

Mr. Chairman: Isn't that (d)?

Mr. Cassidy: Pardon?

Mr. Chairman: Just a minute now. Section 2—all right, go ahead.

Mr. Cassidy: It is a bit confusing with the numbering Mr. Chairman—by adding a new section, 87c(3) "All such agreements shall be subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council." This is a requirement that the cabinet approves and the minister cannot go in on his own hook. We have great confidence in the present minister, but given the pending vacancy near the top of the cabinet, this man might not be the minister for very long. We don't know who might take his place—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): He might be the next Treasurer.

Mr. Cassidy:—and if it was the Solicitor General, for example, we would insist that it be approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Stick to the argument.

Mr. Lawlor: That applies equally to you.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member has a weak argument, he gets down to personalities.

Interjections by hon. members:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, while my colleague is waiting for the amendment to come—

Mr. Singer: Renwick to the rescue.

Mr. Renwick:—perhaps I could ask the minister, is there any significance in the amendment which he introduced in not using the words “experimental” or “demonstration” in the amendment which he proposed to item (b), subsection (2) of section 87c, and also why are those words not equally applicable in item (c)? Would the minister explain why they don’t apply to item (c)?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Experimental, Mr. Chairman, would mean something that we are experimenting on; a demonstration is in fact showing. We would operate a demonstration project but probably not operate an experimental project.

Mr. Renwick: And why, Mr. Chairman, do they not apply to item (c)?

Mr. Singer: Out, out damned spot! Yes. Out, out damned White.

Mr. Cassidy: Is it a blue study as opposed to a brown study?

Mr. Singer: Have we got the copies yet? Oh, good.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, they are interchangeable. I would have no objection to adding that “experimental” in section (c).

Mr. Renwick: And the word demonstration in item (c) as well?

Mr. Cassidy: He is adding the word; he is accepting your amendment.

Mr. Renwick: I don’t know that he is. I am just curious as to the reason.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The reason, Mr. Chairman, would be that by the time the demonstration project is over and after it has been proved, it then becomes, when it is constructed, a transit system. It is no longer an experimental or demonstration project.

I might mention the purpose of that, Mr. Chairman, is in order that the government may have all the patents, rights, accumulated knowledge, experience, data, knowhow, secret processes, formulae, technology, techniques, procedures, studies, test results, programmes, technical and other information. That is the reason that we want that section in; so that we can have it all-embracing under the umbrella of the government of this province.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Cassidy has moved that Bill 93 be amended by adding the following to section 2, under 87c, a new section, subsection (c) as follows—

Mr. Cassidy: Subsection (3).

Mr. Chairman: Subsection (3), I mean, not (c): “All such agreements shall be subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.”

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, if I could just say a word to that now that we do have copies. I hope the opposition have got a copy. The member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) indicates that she has a copy which she can make available and the minister has a copy, too.

This is very simple. The point was raised a number of times in the debate and I don’t think that the minister really will object to this particular one. It is simply an assurance that the cabinet does approve the expenditures—this is a principle of responsible government. When there are expenditures there should be approval by a board such as cabinet. It is a protection for this Legislature and for the people of Ontario, particularly in view of the fact that the projects which may be approved under the legislation as it stands right now are unlimited in amount, except insofar as there is a limit to what you can define as experimental.

I believe that the costing for the two-mile track down at the CNE grounds is of the order of $15 million or $20 million. That in itself is a very substantial kind of expenditure. It is a quarter of the amount that was to be raised by the energy tax and that certainly should be subject to approval by the cabinet as a whole.

The minister will probably say, “Of course that is going to be subject to approval by the cabinet because it is a matter of government policy.” Well, that is fine. What we are saying in this amendment is that since he probably agrees that it ought to happen anyway, therefore let it be a matter of legislation rather than simply a matter of his assurance.

We don’t know—and we will come to this in a later amendment—what other demonstration projects the minister has in mind apart from the intermediate-capacity rapid transit project. However, administratively, I would have thought that if the minister is doling out $5,000 and $10,000 on various small projects that can still be given routine cabinet approval without unnecessarily burdening the cabinet process. It still remains as a protection for this Legislature and as an aspect of the collective responsibility which the government has to bear for the project or projects that the minister may undertake. I hope he accepts this one.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question. The member for Ottawa Centre said that the two-mile track at the CNE was going to cost $15 million or $20 million. It didn't cost that much to tunnel the Yonge St. extension. Is that a fact that the two-mile track at the exhibition is going to cost—

Mr. Cassidy: The whole system, not just the track.

Mr. Givens: You said two miles of track was going to cost $15 million or $20 million.

Mr. Cassidy: The whole system including the cars.

Mr. Paterson: That isn't what you said.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): You should be accurate.

Mr. Givens: Even the whole system, Mr. Chairman—is it going to cost $15 million or $20 million for the whole system?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned at the outset of this debate that I would be unable to mention anything because we are negotiating with the two contractors.

Mr. Givens: Where does he get such a figure?

Mr. Singer: You should give us the ball park figure.

Mr. Givens: Give us the ball park figure. I mean, the statement he made is frightening.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Singer: You might as well have kept the seven per cent energy tax.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. That is not under discussion at this point, anyway.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, perhaps before coming to the main point of the amendment I could help the minister whose hands are obviously tied by the fact that negotiations are in progress.

The costing of the three systems in the three cities concerned was of the order of $13 million, $16 million and $17 million a mile. That included rolling stock and it included double-track line. If one assumes that the single-track line—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. That has nothing to do with this amendment.

An hon. member: Sit down.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm just trying to help the hon. member for York-Forest Hill—

Mr. Chairman: Well, it's out of order.

Mr. Cassidy: —in suggesting that the $15 million figure is reasonable. I'd like the minister's reaction on the amendment.

Mr. Lawlor: He looks as though he needs counsel.

Mr. Chairman: Does the minister have a comment on the first amendment?

Mr. Lawlor: He's breathing hard.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, as a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I can hardly make these copies out, but I heard the amendment that the hon. member for Ottawa Centre was referring to. I would merely point out that presently this minister and my predecessors and my successors deal with a budget of some $700 million, and this is—

Mr. Cassidy: Of how much?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Approximately $700 million. And this is rather a large sum of money; it's rather an onerous responsibility. We accept that responsibility and in the light of that kind of responsibility I feel that the minister should be the one who should be able to enter into this particular contract on his own.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on now! Oh, Mr. Chairman, surely at this point, while we're embarking on this kind of fantasy in dreamland, surely the minister must give us something better than that he has grave responsibilities to spend $700 million.

He is embarking on something that has never been tried before. He's embarking on a new Davis memorial. We are going to initiate the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) into something brand new in the world of transportation.

Mr. Givens: Buckminster Fuller.

Mr. Singer: And somewhere out of the blue he should be able to pull a figure. Is it $1 million? Is it $10 million? Is it $50 million? Does the government really need the $65 million that the Treasurer (Mr. White) abandoned this afternoon?

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it isn't good enough to have the minister tell us about his onerous burdens of being a minister of the cabinet. He must tell us how much this silly experiment is going to cost the people of Ontario. Obviously the government is determined to carry this through, but how much is it going to cost us? How much is the government going to waste down at the Exhibition?

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): Let the member for Downsview tell us!

Mr. Singer: Well, tell us!

Hon. Mr. Carton: Well—

Mr. Givens: If it's $20 million, it's an awful lot of bread.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Singer: Tell us how much it is.

Mr. Chairman: An answer was given to that earlier.

Mr. Singer: It wasn't an answer at all.

Mr. Chairman: Well, it's the only answer he could give.

Mr. Cassidy: Does the minister have a comment on it?

Mr. Singer: It's none of our business. We have no right to know!

Mr. Givens: The minister will hear about it if it's $20 million.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I merely pointed out—and I pointed this out at the opening today—that there are $7 million in my estimates that relate to this for the year 1973-1974. We will be going into the estimates for my ministry within the next week or two weeks. At that time there will be ample opportunity to debate the $7 million. I signed a contract on behalf of the ministry on the Tobermory ferry in the Grey-Bruce riding for $13 million or $14 million.

Mr. Singer: What's that got to do with it?

An hon. member: An awful lot.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Simply, Mr. Chairman, that the cabinet has faith in this minister.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the minister is asking for a blank cheque.

Mr. Givens: The cabinet has faith? What does that prove?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the minister is asking for a blank cheque, and surely before he is given this blank cheque he should have learned a lesson from what happened here this afternoon. Surely the minister has a responsibility—and he's not a stupid man; he has substantial intelligence.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): I agree.

Mr. Cassidy: But misguided, mind you.

Mr. Singer: The minister has a responsibility to tell us how much he has in mind that this fable and fantasy is going to cost the people of Ontario. Tell us what the government is going to waste down at the Exhibition.

Mr. Turner: The member doesn't agree with transportation.

Hon. Mr. Carton: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would again point out that we are presently negotiating contracts with the two remaining contestants.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Those contracts will be signed this week. I am not going to be sucked into any position of divulging anything that is happening vis-à-vis each of the companies that are vying for this contract. That's the last thing that I want to have done.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question?

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman, that's not the question that we're asking him. We're not asking him for an exact dollar-and-cent figure. Is he talking in the vicinity of $5 million, or $10 million, or $15 million, or $20 million? Surely the people of Ontario are entitled to have that ball park kind of figure? If the minister is not prepared to give us that kind of information, how can we expect that he is going to be honest with the people of Ontario?

Mr. Givens: And while he's at it, has he stopped beating his wife?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I really don't indulge in ball park figures. I just don't.

Mr. Singer: Or any figures.

Hon. Mr. Carton: And Mr. Chairman, when the successful applicant is chosen May 1, both contracts become public documents.

Mr. Singer: After it's done he tells us. Shame!

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question?

Mr. Cassidy: No, Mr. Chairman. For the minister's benefit, I would repeat what I said earlier, that is, that the amount will be $15 million to $20 million. If that estimate is wrong, then I would image it will be higher rather than lower. If the minister wishes to deny that, I suggest that he—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. That has nothing to do with this amendment. All those in favour—

Mr. Givens: I think neither one of you knows.

Mr. Cassidy: However, given the minister's silence, Mr. Chairman, I think that those figures had better stand on the record. The problem that we were raising, though, is not even the expenditure of money down at the Exhibition, it's the fact that the whole system that the province is proposing right now has got some pretty basic and fundamental kinds of inconsistencies. I don't think that the minister, with all of his talent, is really going to be able to justify them when he seeks to, as he did not this afternoon.

I wonder, though, in a more genial kind of tone, whether the minister would accept that this decision about the intermediate-capacity rapid transit project is really something different from a Tobermory ferry or the extension of Highway 599 up in the member for Thunder Bay's (Mr. Stokes) riding or a connecting link to the village of Manotick or the routine kinds of things that he is doing. I wonder whether, therefore, he would accept a slight amendment to that amendment I just offered him in these terms to make it read, that all such agreements requiring an expenditure of more than $500,000 should be subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that by doing that, then we do really single out the intermediate-capacity rapid transit project, because that is the project at which this is directed. I think that not just the minister, but his cabinet, should really take responsibility for that, and more responsibility than is taken just by Management Board saying, "Okay, we'll spend $20 million on it this year," and that kind of thing. We want a decision; we want to see that the man who makes decisions in the seat over there is, in fact, involved and doesn't try to let the minister loose like a rat from a sinking ship—does a rat sink from a ship?—anyway, to let the minister loose, to cut him adrift, if he finds that the minister's pipedreams are not working.

I want to say to the minister, Mr. Chairman, that the comments that we have offered from this side—perhaps different from the comments of the official opposition, who don't want public transit at all—are genuinely directed toward the need for more public transit and toward a much greater investment. They are a reflection of our fear that the minister may have been duped by all of this expertise, because of the noted capacity for even the best paid experts in the world to make some pretty grievous mistakes.

Anyway, would the minister accept a $500,000 limit, so if he wants to give $200,000 for another Bay Ridges project, that's fine? Or if he wants to do some other innovative project, and I would hope there would be a few in Thunder Bay and Sudbury and some cities of the north, rather than always in the south, he's got the freedom to do that and the administrative flexibility. But on major demonstration projects, he would require cabinet approval.

Mr. Givens: The estimate on Ontario Place wasn't—

Mr. Singer: That was when they started.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I must say that I cannot accept that, and I will give the hon. member for Ottawa Centre a very valid reason why. The demonstration project for two of his colleagues for the city of Sudbury amount to $3 million.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, so? My colleagues wouldn't object to getting cabinet approval.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The point is, Mr. Chairman, that these demonstration projects that we are presently carrying on relate to other things besides intermediate capacity. We have had this power, this carte blanche power, as you call it, for the last five or six years.

Mr. Lewis: Carton blanche, I think they are calling it.

Hon. Mr. Carton: It has not been abused.

Mr. Singer: Who is to stop it and what's $20 million?

Hon. Mr. Carton: We do have the dial-a-bus which is a project that has received recognition all over the continent. We have the GO system which, despite some people who have criticized it, has been a tremendous success. We have our air demonstration in northern Ontario. We have many demonstrations going on.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question? Those in favour—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, you're in a very impulsive mood tonight, wanting to drive this vote through by your using the powers of the monolith over there. They were so excitable earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman: No.

Mr. Lewis: I just wanted to rise for a moment to say that all of us on this side of the House don't especially appreciate the sophistry of the minister. He is, of course, an able politician—we all know that—and a man who has some tender grasp of his portfolio, although it may be eluding him in this particular circumstance.

But he knows, as everyone in the House knows, that he jeopardizes the contract not for one moment on May 1, to give us a general estimate of the cost. He doesn't imperil the contents; he doesn't imperil concluding the agreement. He doesn't risk any revelation before the fact. He would do himself a service and the Legislature a service and the public a service were he, in the context of this bill, to give us a sense of what the cost would be for this demonstration project.

He may make specious arguments—ministers do in defence of the indefensible—but let him not believe that those of us on this side of the House are somehow taken in by it. For him to say $15 million or $18 million or $20 million doesn't stop him from signing the contract on May 1. It does no damage to those who have submitted contracts to him and certainly won't particularly detract from the excitement of the announcement itself, which he will adorn with all the language and statistics he needs in order to make it a page one, headline story.

What my colleague from Ottawa Centre is putting to the minister is surely valid. The minister is entering into a world that seems to some of us surreal. He casts himself in the role of sorcerer's apprentice. We will see how it works. We are all profoundly sceptical of this venture. I think that he owes it to the opposition and to the public to let us know a little more specifically what is involved. I just wanted to register our concern at this point and very strong support for the contention of the member for Ottawa Centre at the way the minister is behaving.

If I can add a gratuitous aside, it is not in character for the minister. And an even more gratuitous aside from that, this is precisely what is causing the minister's government such harassment day after day—its refusal to come clean in areas of extreme public importance. For some reason, all of the cabinet ministers over there are now addicted to a conspiracy of silence and everything they do of consequence is then reversed.

Mr. Givens: Straight from the Watergate syndrome.

Mr. Lewis: Spadina was reversed, conflict of interest was reversed, election financing was reversed, the Queen's Park complex was reversed, regional government is reversed, the energy tax is reversed. The government is entering into one ill-gotten venture after another, and it is raising such spectres about itself collectively as a government that I don't know what's wrong with it.

Now the government is giving us a piece of legislation for which it wants carte blanche, that it knows in five days time is going to lead it to an expenditure in excess of $15 million on what may well be a totally inappropriate expenditure, an absolute white elephant—a catastrophe in the field of public transportation. And the government won't even condescend to tell us what it will cost at the point at which it is asking legislative approval.

Mr. Singer: Who is to stop it? And what's $20 million!

Mr. Lewis: Well, some would say the government is arrogant. I don't. I just think it is really quite foolish and that all of its members are intoxicated with using the Legislature as a sort of private forum to get things out of the way—and that's not the way the Legislature works.

An hon. member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Lewis: It happens in here day after day. Perhaps the minister can give me an example of another piece of legislation where in effect the government is asking for approval in advance of an enormous expenditure for a project, which is on the face of it questionable and in the substance of it perhaps preposterous.

Mr. Givens: It is not even a project.

Mr. Lewis: Well, it is not even a project. I mean I don't mind the government—

Mr. Singer: It's just a ride at the Exhibition, that's all.

Mr. Lewis: I don't mind the government bailing out the CNE, but this is going to inordinate lengths. You know, $15 million to $20 million on a little mini-ride through the CNE seems a bit much and I—

Mr. Givens: Paddy Conklin could do it cheaper than that.

Mr. Lewis: And Paddy Conklin would tell us how much it cost. He would have it to the penny.

Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. I know that I am intruding on your exemplary patience. The minister is making a mistake. He is signing the contract on May 1 and without jeopardizing its contents one jot, he could tell us in general terms what this project is going to cost the people of Ontario. It bears directly on this—that's why the bill is before us. Is this bill not before us because the minister has to have approval before entering into the agreement? Well, then, why does he ask the Legislature for agreement without giving us an idea of what it will cost?

Mr. Givens: We want to know how much!

Mr. Lewis: What is this business of forever concealing costs?

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): We don't like giving the government carte blanche.

Mr. Lewis: We really resist it and that's why we voted against it on second reading. That's why we are moving this amendment. We concur with the government in its wish for public transit, but not these supernatural schemes which the government dreams up—the Premier (Mr. Davis) and Buckminster Fuller and the minister and his associates.

Mr. Singer: McCarthy and McCarthy.

Mr. Lewis: Surely you can give us more substance than this when you are asking for this kind of money. I am sorry we will have to vote against you on this, but it makes no sense your hiding in this case—no sense at all.

Mr. Givens: That's the kiss of death.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I believe the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party may not have been in the Legislature when I mentioned originally that I presently have power to carry on demonstration projects. The power has been there for the past number of years.

Mr. Lewis: I understand.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Well then, take this out.

Hon. Mr. Carton: And I point out to you, as I pointed out to you when I introduced the bill, that the hon. members do not realize it is not just a case in any demonstration project of giving ball park figures; second, it is a more complete picture than just buying a demonstration project at the CNE—

Mr. Lewis: I agree.

Hon. Mr. Carton: We are buying all the technology, all the knowhow, all the expertise; it will belong to this province. Therefore, supposing—and I just pose this as a supposition to you; you are a man of fairly good sense—

Mr. Lewis: I can handle supposition.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Supposing, for example, that company X had a certain price for the demonstration project, but their price for the other was excessive.

Mr. Lewis: But that's not the point.

Hon. Mr. Carton: It is the point.

Mr. Cassidy: We are simply asking the price—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Carton: We are dealing with two companies, and there is no way, Mr. Chairman, that I am going to jeopardize four years of work by this ministry now that we are down to the wire. I stated at the outset the problem that I had, that I could not compare one with the other or go into the figures. I just cannot do it, because one of them may have been low on the demonstration project, for which you want a ball park figure, and high on the other one—

Mr. Cassidy: But that is not what we are asking.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —therefore, that would not be the one that would get the contract. It is a very difficult question you are asking.

Mr. Singer: What are you spending?

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question?

Mr. Cassidy: No, Mr. Chairman, I just want to comment on the obsessive secrecy of the minister. If in fact he had the power to do this, then I am not sure why he is before us. However, he should be enough of a parliamentarian to realize that sometimes powers given to governments are in fact excessive, and when the legislation comes before us there is time to reconsider whether the situation that prevailed before was justifiable or not.

I guess it would not have crossed the minds of many members on this side of the House that the minister had power to enter into contracts for demonstration projects. However, now that we are seized with the question, we want to do something about it. We think that a mistake was being made; this is a chance to correct it.

What troubles me, Mr. Chairman, is the way in which the minister is acting. We are not asking how much Krauss-Maffei is bidding on this stage, or phase 2 or phase 3, and how much Hawker-Siddeley are bidding on this stage and how much their overall bid is for what might follow, and the same in relation to the other firm. We are asking a very simple question: Are they both between $15 million and $20 million, or between $15 million and $25 million even, or are they both around $10 million?

The requirements for the project are set out in this red book. I would imagine that, in the same way as you don't have to pay twice as much for a Ford car as you have to pay for a Chevrolet car that does about the same thing, the bids are not that far apart; they are within 25 per cent or 35 per cent of each other. Therefore, this is what is known commonly as a ball park figure, which the minister, his experts and everybody else uses day after day; and it would not be too much to bring the House into his confidence—

Mr. Lewis: You can't have much more of a ball park figure than $1.4 billion over 10 years. I mean, that's pretty ball park.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. And that's all we have been given.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I keep hearing $1.35 billion over 10 years. Let's use our common sense on the approach that has been taken by this government. We are spending X millions of dollars, which are considerably lower by far—and I am not mentioning any figure—to have a demonstration project; and it shows the eminent good sense of this government to have a demonstration project before plunging into a $1.35 billion programme.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: He is intervening.

Mr. Singer: Surely the minister is hoist with his own petard. For some reason that he hasn't seen fit to tell us, he has been advised to come here and ask for another bill. Obviously the section that he is replacing doesn't give him or his advisers enough scope to go ahead. They have chosen to change the ground rules so he comes here and asks for a new bill. He brings us Bill 93.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it makes abundant good sense that when he does he will come clean with the Legislature and he will be frank and honest with the people of Ontario. When he says it is something less than $1.3 or $1.4 billion, that is something less than frank and honest.

We are entitled to know, Mr. Chairman, how much in round figures this merry-go-round or kiddie-car ride at the Exhibition is going to cost. How much is the government going to spend on what many of us think is this futile experiment? How much of our money are you going to spend?

Today, surely you descended into some pretty deep caverns of humility when your Treasurer had to get up and abandon $65 million for this year and $100 million for next year.

Mr. Turner: We rose to greater heights.

Mr. Singer: If you would be frank and come clean with us, we could find out in what context your Treasurer talks. Should we put on sweaters to protect your kiddie-car ride? Should we make sure that our pets aren't taxed? Should we turn down the thermostats at night? Just what is involved?

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the people of Ontario are entitled to know how much this experiment at the Exhibition is going to cost. The minister has chosen his ground for reasons best known to himself and he comes here and asks for a new bill. Obviously those who advise him think that he hasn't enough authority. He asks for the bill and he's got to face the House with these premises in mind. How much are you going to spend? Tell us.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please, just before the member for St. George speaks. The amendment says, "All such agreements shall be subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council." That's really the gist of this amendment.

Mr. Singer: It is the amended motion that we are talking to.

Mr. Chairman: I have had an opportunity to check a later proposed amendment which deals with some dollar amounts, but certainly this one doesn't.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, if I can comment on this. The minister is being very unco-operative and doesn't see any particular point in amending the original amendment. If you will, this question has now assumed symbolic significance because of the intransigence of the minister. What I want to say to the minister is this.

First, you were refusing to say or to give us some kind of an estimate, not of the overall project—we have a figure on that, $1.3 billion over 10 years—but of the cost of this demonstration project. Perhaps your people don't know; if they don't know then something is seriously amiss within the ministry. I assume that they do know and I assume that you have been informed. This secrecy does not become you well.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, the minister and his people chose not to bring forward this legislation which is probably the only occasion on which the decision the minister is about to make will be open to debate in the Legislature. He chose to introduce it last Wednesday, was it?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Two weeks ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Two weeks ago Thursday.

Mr. Cassidy: Two weeks ago Thursday? All right, in that case I guess I have to blame myself rather than the minister for the way in which it was introduced. I thought it was introduced before.

However, it was printed at the beginning of a short week, Mr. Chairman, and brought in right after the Easter recess—fairly hastily! That isn't being particularly square with the minister although I do acknowledge that perhaps as a spokesman I might have been a bit quicker on the draw.

The third thing, Mr. Chairman, and this relates directly to the amendment, is that the minister is refusing to reveal the amount of this demonstration project, or an estimated amount—which he can certainly do without betraying any trade secrets or anything of either party. We are not asking what each one is bidding. We are just asking how much, roughly, is it going to cost. If you are $3 million over or $3 million under you will be met with warm and generous treatment on this part of the House, I assure you.

Mr. Lewis: Right, because for that government a $3 million error is nothing, either way.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, the minister is being covert and secretive even with his own cabinet. He says "I do the Tobermory ferry" and he does the highways and 401 and this kind of thing. But what kind of control of the policy of the minister is there when he lands estimates—I don't have them in front of me—for $200 million or $300 million or $400 million worth of road construction on Management Board's lap? Ministers are busy people; they are politicians; they work in this House; they have their own ministries. They are not going to quibble over $3 million here or $15 million there. They are going to say, "Well, okay, if he says it's all right, it's all right," and Management Board sort of streams it through fairly routinely without thinking about it.

In this case the minister will come to this House after the fact with his estimates in order to talk about the Exhibition—not before the contract is let, but after, according to his present timetable—and, Mr. Chairman, he is not even willing to get approval of cabinet for this proposal, which is a commitment, as I was saying earlier, or is the very strong likelihood of a commitment to the spending of over $1 billion over the next few years on that part of the province.

When you look at it that way, Mr. Chairman, the minister is asking this House to give him the power to make what amounts to an almost ironclad commitment for a particular system on which he hopes the government will spend over $1 billion over the next few years.

My leader suggests that the minister has too many fine qualities to call it arrogance—I don't know what it is. I really think it's inexcusable. I think that the amendment should be accepted and that the minister should not flatter himself that he has such powers of wisdom that he can make decisions of this import to the future of our cities and to the budget of this province, as he intends to make, completely on his own hook and without cabinet approval.

Mr. Chairman: The member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I have some sympathy for the minister. I have found on occasion in the past that there are times when one cannot make, shall we say, a full disclosure, while one is negotiating a contract.

Mr. Cassidy: That is not the point.

Mrs. Campbell: I am aware that that isn't the point, but I didn't interrupt the hon. gentleman down the way. I like to be free to say what I have to say, too.

Surely, there are two things involved in what is before us, Mr. Chairman. Could we know if the minister is in the midst of negotiations with two different companies which have been named in this House? Is the municipality privy to these negotiations at this time, since the whole force and effect of this bill is the power first to enter into agreements with the municipality?

It is important to me, Mr. Chairman, in taking a position on either the bill or the amendment, to know just what is the position of the municipality vis-à-vis these negotiations. Does the municipality at this point in time have ball park figures? Does the TTC have ball park figures? If they do, then, Mr. Chairman, I say that it is absolutely incumbent upon the minister to at least give the same information to this chamber as may be available at this point in time to the municipality and/or the TTC.

Surely in those figures we should have some type of disclosure that can be translated into some sort of consideration without jeopardizing the specifics of the negotiations, which I thoroughly understand. Could I have an answer, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, firstly, the municipality has not been a party to the negotiations, therefore it does not know. The ministry officials, together with legal counsel, have been negotiating and are presently still negotiating at this very hour with both companies. And that is why—

Mrs. Campbell: I am sorry, may I get that clarified? The minister's officials?

Hon. Mr. Carton: My officials—

Mrs. Campbell: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —and my officials only—

Mrs. Campbell: I see.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —along with counsel, have been and are presently negotiating with the two companies involved, and that is why—and I regret this very much—I cannot divulge anything in this House that would jeopardize the bargaining power of the ministry officials with either of the two companies.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Carton: It is not nonsense. Something that may seem harmless to members of this House could convey information to one of the bargaining parties that would give them an inkling as to what may be happening with the other company. There is no way—

Mr. Cassidy: That is nonsense. The figure has come out before. You just won't say it in the House, that's all.

Hon. Mr. Carton: If the figures came out before then I would suggest the hon. member go back to the figures that were related before and have a look at them.

Mr. Cassidy: We'd like to hear it from the minister.

Mr. Lewis: You know to whom you are awarding the contract, don't you? I mean it's April 24. It's probably at the printers.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member for St. George, that the TTC also are not party to the negotiations.

Mrs. Campbell: But do they know what your negotiations are about?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, Mr. Chairman, I mentioned earlier this afternoon that on the technical evaluation, which is not the bargaining, there are four experts from the TTC who have been involved with some 25 or 30 other experts. That is only on the technical evaluation. The TTC does not know of the negotiations that are presently being carried on by my ministry officials with both companies.

Mr. Givens: This is what you call—

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, if that is the case—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. I'm afraid I'm going to have to tighten this up a bit because the amendment says, "All such agreements shall be subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council," and here you're away off base really.

Mrs. Campbell: No, Mr. Chairman, I don't—

Mr. Chairman: The Lieutenant Governor in Council. We've already passed subsection (1) which says, "The minister and a municipality may enter into agreements," so that part of the discussion has been carried.

Mrs. Campbell: But surely, Mr. Chairman, while we are trying to find out what this minister is proposing in this, and with this sort of amendment before us, we are entitled, with respect, to know further about what type of approval we're apt to be giving at this point in time?

Mr. Chairman: The gist of the amendment is that, "All such agreements shall be subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council."

Mrs. Campbell: And those agreements relate both to the municipalities and to the government.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. It's out of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief question of the minister before we come to a vote on this amendment. There has been some talk of this; is there any possibility that, in fact, you may delay the final awarding of a contract past May 1?

Mr. Lewis: No, not according to the question period.

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Any further questions?

Mr. Lewis: You know who is getting it.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. All those in favour—

Mr. Sargent: Yes, I have a point of order. I object, sir, to the fact that you let the member for Ottawa Centre go on for an hour this afternoon and you cut off the member for St. George. That's not fair treatment.

Mr. Chairman: No, I let the member for St. George make her comments.

Mr. Sargent: Well, why don't you run that chair orderly?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. We have to get back to the amendment that's before us.

Mr. Sargent: You'd better sharpen up there.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. "All such agreements shall be subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council."

Those in favour of Mr. Cassidy's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): Who is the leader over there?

Mr. Lewis: We just want to stack at the end of the bill, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Reid: You people better practise that standing up.

Mr. Lewis: I didn't think it would be necessary.

Mr. Reid: It is hard to tell which one the leader is.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Does the hon. member for Ottawa Centre have any further amendments?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, on the list that I sent along, I think the principle of 87c(4) has already been covered in the debate that we've covered up to now, and therefore I have only one further amendment which would be 87c(5) (a) to (d). Section 87c(5)(e), if you can follow me, at the bottom of the succeeding page was covered in the amendment that was already accepted by the minister in relation to Canadian content.

Mr. Chairman: You wish to place it? Would you read it and then I'll read it.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I'll read it, Mr. Chairman. The amendment is that the bill be amended by adding the following section—I think it's 87c(5):

(a) In this paragraph, "intermediate-capacity rapid transit demonstration project" means the demonstration project as specified for the Canadian National Exhibition grounds in Toronto by the systems research branch, research division of the ministry.

(b) No agreement shall be entered into under this paragraph until there has been a full public review of the specifications for the intermediate-capacity rapid transit demonstration project as prepared by the ministry.

(c) The public review shall be carried out by an independent commissioner appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council who shall be empowered to call for persons, papers and things and to examine and make public all documents and submissions related to the intermediate-capacity rapid transit project and to hear testimony from ministry officials, the firms tendering for the project, outside consultants to the ministry and from the general public.

(d) The commissioner appointed under this section shall submit to the Legislature before June 24, 1973, or such later date as the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall prescribe, a report—then there is a word omitted—evaluating the proposals required or being considered by the ministry and advising on the feasibility, technological risks, costs and necessity of each of the innovative features being sought by the ministry.

Mr. Chairman, this is a relatively long and complex amendment. Perhaps I can summarize it for the members very briefly. What this does in effect is tell the minister, "Hold off on your contract for two months from today. There should be a public review at which the work of the ministry effectively over the past four years can be laid before the public; the proposals to the ministry can be laid before the public."

There would be a chance for people who are concerned with this to evaluate what the ministry is doing before embarking on what could be a potentially disastrous or extremely high-cost project rather than afterward, after $20 million is spent for a demonstration project or after half a billion or more is spent on the actual operating system.

The wording of the amendment is all to that purpose, to give the commissioner power to tender a report by June 24 to the Legislature and to try to say in broad terms the things that he should evaluate. Those are specifically the feasibility, the technological risks and the costs and the necessity of each of the innovative features being sought by the minister.

Perhaps I can draw an analogy, Mr. Chairman. Let's suppose that the minister goes down Bay St. in order to look at cars. There are Vegas and there are Cadillacs. He decides that on behalf of the people of Ontario he will buy a Cadillac, with power steering; power windows; power seat; air conditioning; with an enormous wheelbase and huge wheels; a very powerful and thirsty engine—

Mr. W. Newman: Well, he wouldn't have to buy any fuel with the member around!

Mr. Cassidy: I think the minister gets the picture and so does the House. He says, "I'll look at the Cadillac and I'll also look at the top-line Buick and I will make a decision on the part of the people of Ontario as to which to have."

Since he has refused to accept the amendment about cabinet approval he would have the power to make that decision himself. He decides which one to have. The Buick has self-regulating brakes but the Cadillac has a system which automatically dips the headlights and there are a number of differences between them. One is a bit bigger; one is a bit more luxurious and so on but the minister makes his choice. It's essentially between an $8,500 automobile on the one hand and a $9,400 automobile on the other hand. Maintenance costs over the long term may be slightly different. Anyway he has reserved to himself the power to make that decision, if I can continue this analogy.

What this amendment does, Mr. Chairman, is say that perhaps the 2½ or three-ton weight of the Cadillac or Buick wasn't a necessary feature. Perhaps the basic goal, which was to provide economical and efficient transportation, could have been met by one of the compact or subcompact cars available there. They didn't have power steering; they didn't have a computer-controlled injection system; they didn't have self-regulating brakes, or automatically dipping lights, or rawhide upholstery—which I am sure the minister would choose—or various other features like that. But the purpose of this report or evaluation would be, if you will, to protect the minister and the government, and the rest of us who've got to pay, from getting into the Cadillac class, when it may well be that there are other options which the ministry isn't looking at.

Perhaps I can force that over to considering the actual system that the minister has talked about.

I had the chance during the supper break to have a look at the specifications which the ministry sent me late last week. Members will recall that the government wanted a system with a capacity of up to 20,000 people per hour, and that it had wanted a number of other features.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I find from this evaluation study that, in fact, the capacity of the system which is being proposed for the two-mile track at the Canadian National Exhibition isn't 20,000, or 15,000, or 10,000 people per hour, it's 2,000 people per hour. The projected traffic on the network at first will peak at about 1,300 people per hour. The system should be capable of expansion, again not to 15,000 or 20,000 people per hour, but to 4,000 people per hour. That is roughly two-fifths of the capacity of the old Bloor St. streetcar lines in this city, or half the capacity of a well-travelled bus system on arterial streets.

The system will have 10 cars, Mr. Chairman—only 10—and each one will have a capacity of around 20 passengers. The system will be a one-way system; it won't go two ways, it'll just go one way.

The system, with all the technological frills built into it, will have an average speed, according to the ministry, of 22.7 mph. Coincidentally, the speed projected for the new Spadina subway, whichever route is chosen for it, will also be about 22.7 mph. And the average speed, including taking passengers on and putting them off, of the Yonge St. subway extension past Eglinton is also about 22 or 23 mph. That involves dropping off and taking on passengers from a train that carries 700 or 800 people or more, maybe 1,000, and not from a train which at the most will carry, the minister said, 140 people or, in fact, far less if the cars run on an individual basis.

Mr. Chairman, one final technical point—I won't go much further on this—the cars are to run at headways of as little as five seconds, that is 200 feet apart. As I recall, a car travelling at 30 mph covers 44 feet per second, and therefore that five seconds is equal to 200 feet, and it is a very short distance for these things to travel. I am not technical enough to know exactly how long it takes to stop. I believe it is about 70 or 80 feet, and that means that there are terrific demands, and quite possibly unrealistic demands, being made on the system by the requirements that the minister and his people have laid down.

All we can do is raise questions right now. The minister keeps on beating his chest and talking about the tremendous work that has been done in the ministry. I have had a look at the specifications and I admit that obviously they have thought through the technical details of this system to a fair degree. Whether they have thought through the whole system is another question. I think that is one of the areas which such a public study as recommended in this review would have to settle.

But it has all been done in house, Mr. Chairman. It's all been done behind closed doors up at Downsview or in the minister's office with the co-ordinator sleeping on the couch between bursts of work. The public has not had any access to the kind of thinking that is going on in the ministry. The public until November was not really aware at all of the concepts that were being debated in the ministry. There has been so little information, apart from that original PR presentation. There has been so little information made available that the public has not had the equipment, the information, really to come to grips with what the minister is doing. I think it's significant that this debate here is the first time that there has been discussion or an attempt at full debate on what the minister is intending to do.

If he wants to go to some other country where there's a dictatorship and make decisions that way, that's fine; and if technical experts can advise him, then he can simply go ahead and make them. But, darn it all, this is a different kind of system.

The minister is making a decision which affects a billion dollars or more of provincial spending. What this amendment suggests is that there be the chance to look it over, to see whether the work of the ministry has been valid or not. I'm able to raise questions but I can't find answers, because I haven't been able to get the information so far nor has anybody else. To do it after the fact doesn't make an awful lot of sense.

If I can return to my earlier analogy, it's as if you drove up here to the front, having paid for your Cadillac on behalf of the people of Ontario, and then somebody said, "But, Mr. Minister, didn't you really only need a Vega, in terms of what people actually require for transportation in and around the city?" Once you've laid out your money, there's a no-refund kind of policy from the people who are putting up the bids for this particular project. You can't get the money back. You're sunk, you're in it and you're in it deep just as the Treasurer was in it deep. The minister can't even get out as easily as he can because the Treasurer can say, "Okay, we won't raise that tax." In the minister's case, he will have hardware there and he can dismantle it, but I must say he is going to look awfully bad, if that's what's going to happen.

I admit that enough money can make any kind of system work. I admit also that there is a seductive attraction, particularly to people with the class interests, if I may say so, of people of the minister's party, to this kind of "press a button and go all the way from Malvern downtown and don't stop to pick up the plebs" kind of system that the minister is designing. There are certain seductive features to it. But it seems to me that at the very least we may be picking up a champagne system when he ought to be looking at it from the point of view of a beer budget.

So this is designed, Mr. Chairman, to raise those questions by ensuring that there can be a public review. Two months, given the slippage which has taken place already, are not going to be that extreme. The government had intended, if I can recall the timetable, that the selection of a system would be made by April 1 and that the specifications for final design would be out by May 1. The minister is running a month or so behind.

To bring the public into his confidence and to ensure that, if the government is going to go ahead, they have looked seriously at what they are getting into, and that they have looked seriously particularly at the extra cost dictated by this desire for personal rapid transit rather than simply a new mode, a new technology for lightweight rapid transit without all of these kinds of luxury features, the extra months' delay would be well worthwhile, and I hope the minister accepts this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask—and I'm not being facetious—does the hon. member have any alternative system?

Mr. Cassidy: I'll speak to that, Mr. Chairman, since the minister chose to raise it. I have a number of alternatives that have been put to me in the course of work that I have done in trying to evaluate what the minister is trying to do. As the minister is aware, as I think he may have had a meeting, a group of people in Ottawa are suggesting that something like 50 or 60 miles of monorail to serve the entire national capital region, including Hull and Gatineau Point, and so on, on the Quebec side, could be built for a sum of money very little more than the amount suggested for 12 or 13 miles of the system proposed by the ministry.

I don't know whether that's correct. I have certain questions in my mind about their particular proposals. However, some of the points that they raised I think are very valid, Mr. Chairman. One of the points they raise is that they want a system where the line costs are cut down by the elimination of switching, the elimination of offline loading. The trains will simply run on a fixed network without switching, apart from the switching needed to get to maintenance yards, which need not be at high speeds.

They have certain concepts in terms of the savings in money that can be done by operating a free fare system, which I think is important to consider. Once they eliminate switching, then it is possible to run the system on a block signal rather than a computer monitoring system with relatively short headways of a minute or so, which are not going to greatly extend the waiting time of the trains. As the minister has already said, his trains will run in seven-car units with 140 passengers or so. Their suggestion is for maybe 300 passengers per train—something like that.

The system they propose has ultimate capacities up in the 40,000 or 50,000 range, as opposed to the 20,000 the minister talks about and the theoretical capacity of 15,000 that the specifications talk about for the system selected for the CNE, and the actual capacity of this system of only 12,000, Mr. Chairman—because it says specifically here that the design capacity will be 80 per cent of the theoretical capacity.

Now, I think they raise a number of good points. They estimate that, by eliminating switching, eliminating the offline loading, eliminating the computer controlled system and having block signal control, they can cut 30 or 40 per cent from the cost of their system—or for that matter other systems such as the Krauss-Maffei or Hawker-Siddeley system.

In other words, they could provide a service which may take two or three minutes longer from the extremities to downtown, but on the other hand provide so much more service to the Ottawa public than what the minister is proposing that its net overall effect is much more favourable in terms of effecting a switch from automobiles to public transit.

Now, as I say, even the technology that they talk about, which is monorail, is not essential to some of the concepts they have raised. It could even be applied if the minister uses some of the new technology that he wants to use.

In the long run it is possibly more workable, requires less maintenance, or creates less noise and is therefore more acceptable in an elevated mode.

Another alternative which I think requires very careful consideration, Mr. Chairman, is the concept that is known as light rapid transit. Light rapid transit is a development, if you will, of streetcar technology. It is based on high-speed electric vehicles which have been developed, or evolved, if you will, from streetcars like the PCV or PRV—whatever the Toronto streetcars are called now—and that was the most successful model ever used in North America.

Light rapid transit relies on wider station spacing on a reserved right of way. It achieves average speeds the same as those of the system proposed by the minister. It can be built for costs which are about a third less, I believe, than the costs that have been estimated by the ministry in announcing systems for Toronto, Ottawa and Hamilton.

It is much more flexible, it need not be built all at the same time, nor need it all be built in the elevated mode all at the same time.

Particularly in Toronto, light rapid transit is compatible both with certain kinds of subways and also with streetcars. It would be possible, for example, to have a Queen St. line—and I hope the minister is listening carefully to this because it makes a lot of sense; it comes out of the Toronto Transit Commission planning and suggestions.

A Queen St. underground subway running for three or four miles, whatever there has to be, would then lead into light rapid transit lines to Downsview, possibly to Malton, or maybe it is to—I am sorry, there is another line out there which the ministry projected in its intermediate-capacity rapid transit system—and also along the present reserved right-of-way of the Lakeshore street cars.

In the east end there are rights-of-way available to take cars which could join into trains through the Queen St. subway and then split up to provide light rapid transit service with the required intermediate capacities and high speeds out to Malvern, up Don Mills Rd. and out in the direction, I suppose, of the Scarborough Expressway; or let's hope the never-to-be-built Scarborough Expressway. In other words, a very substantial portion of the system, which the minister wants to cover with intermediate-capacity rapid transit using his new technology, could be met with existing technology that has more than 50 or 60 years of history and development behind it. This is in the form of light-weight articulated vehicles that could also be automated, could also run at short headways, could also be run without drivers if necessary, and could also lend themselves to automated fare collection systems. They could provide about the same kind of speeds and standard of comfort, and in aesthetic terms could be made very similar.

It boggles the mind that because light rapid transit is not a proprietary system coming from one particular manufacturer but because the transit systems in Europe and North America that have used it have tended to be their own entrepreneurs in developing light rapid transit for their own particular needs, the ministry wouldn't consider it for the situation here in Ontario.

I don't know whether light rapid transit would fit Ottawa conditions, but it's quite possible that it would. It's clear that light rapid transit, which is also faster to build and less prone to technological risk, could provide some pretty significant solutions in the Toronto area an awful lot sooner. In my examination of the ministry's study of various systems that were available a couple of years ago, I noted that the section on steel-wheeled, dualrail systems contained no printout on light rapid transit. There was no printout at all; I'm not sure why. The minister might have an explanation for that. This system now is in use in 20 or 30 cities and certainly is useful here. Why isn't the minister considering alternatives like that? The monorail itself may or not—

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order please.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, the minister asked a question.

Mr. Chairman: Then the question was out of order because this amendment has nothing to do with all the other alternative systems. This is information which I think could be exchanged in a private dialogue at some other time between the hon. member and the minister, quite frankly.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Let's get back to this amendment.

An hon. member: You'd better sit down.

Mr. Cassidy: Okay. I've been making a case for public review. The minister asked what all the alternatives are. They should come out during the course of a public review. They are not coming out right now, and one of the purposes of this debate is to ventilate an issue like this before the minister makes a pretty crucial decision.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. minister have comments on this amendment?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, firstly, I would like to make two corrections with respect to the demonstration project at the Canadian National Exhibition. We are only purchasing a certain number of vehicles for that demonstration project. That is why there are X number of vehicles, which is understandable and makes abundant good sense. It is a one-way system, as the hon. member stated, because we do not need a two-way system for demonstration projects or experiments; and the speed is 50 miles per hour.

Mr. Deacon: I thought the minister said it was just an experiment.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The maximum speed is 50 miles per hour. The speed of 22.7 miles per hour was taken out of context; that's the average speed related to curves and grades which we're doing the testing on.

The hon. member made some remarks a moment ago about why not this and why not that. He mentioned no switching. No switching results in an inflexible system; it results in many passenger transfers, making it unattractive to the users. Both the systems—in other words, the one that the member is mentioning and this one—can carry up to 20,000 passengers per hour per direction.

Light rapid transit has been reviewed, based on information supplied by the TTC. All advantages claimed for the light rapid transit system also apply to the intermediate-capacity system, but the intermediate-capacity system also offers us advantages that the light rail doesn't. It offers greater flexibility, fewer environmental problems of noise, etc.

Mr. Chairman, basically what I am trying to say is that over the course of the last three years we have had about 30 to 35 experts from all over the world zeroing in on a new intermediate-capacity system that will be utilized in this province. And I think I owe it to this House to tell the hon. members some of the factors that have been studied. I feel it is incumbent upon me now to go into detail and show what has been taken into consideration, rather than just saying that the minister took a trip around the world and looked at three systems and picked them out.

First of all, I mentioned this afternoon the experts that are engaged in this. Apart from the ministry experts, we have the experts from the TTC, which is acknowledged as being one of the outstanding transportation groups by the members of the opposition.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister has the technical experts but not the planning experts.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The technical experts, and that's what they have been doing all along.

Mr. Cassidy: But not the planning experts.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Technical experts.

Mr. Cassidy: Not the planning experts?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Well this is what we are talking about now, technology. The member is talking planning.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is talking about planning as well.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Let's talk technology, which is the basis of this demonstration project—technology. Apart from the experts I just mentioned—and I won't go into all their names again because they are a matter of record—we have experts on each particular phase of this particular project, whatever the phase may be. I gave the member the names this afternoon.

Now, dealing with evaluation criteria—and this is what has been going on over the past number of months, evaluating these two systems. On system performance: The technological assessment of this system and the sub-systems in terms of feasibility of design, quality of design, and integration of all sub-systems; suspension and guidance; switching; propulsion and motor control; including electrical braking, mechanical braking; coupling; power collection; power distribution; command and control; vehicle body and passenger compartment and guideway.

Under flexibility: Flexibility of the application; the range of capacities up to 20,000 passengers per hour per direction; the range of vehicle sizes; the range of operating strategies; line-haul service, with stops at all stations, express service, personal service; the geometric constraints; the operating flexibility, meaning the transitions in service level, ease and range with which changes in speed and train spacing may be effected; ease of coupling; the network expandability, the potential for higher speed, the freight handling.

Safety for the users: The users' safety, strongly dependent on the command and control system, the failure modes and effects analyses; the design for safety (failsafe design, redundancy, interlocking, etc.); the safety for the bystanders and the trespassers; safety for the maintenance and operating personnel.

Under reliability: Equipment reliability; availability; cycle time to failure; mean time to restore service; all-weather reliability; snow, ice, wind, rain. The environmental effects: Pollution emissions, noise and vibration. Aesthetics; space requirements; the user attributes, the time and convenience factors largely related to command and control, the ride comfort.

The system cost; the future revenue system, capital costs excluding right of way; the CNE demonstration system; the company criteria; the long-term contractual agreement; the data rights; the licensing and royalties; the competitive bidding; the ability to deliver; project management capability; the level of commitments, i.e. performance time, contracted cost, and status of the hardware development.

Those are the criteria for these particular systems, Mr. Chairman, that 30 to 40 experts have been examining over the past number of months. The result of the evaluation of eight systems was the elimination of five, and then one withdrew. These are the things that have been gone into by the experts over the past many months, nay years, because they started this search, as I say, three years ago.

Now obviously this does not preclude other considerations. As a matter of fact, one of the members of the party of the member for Ottawa Centre brought me a particular system that he thought had some merit. We are looking at everything. One does not close one's eyes; one does not become blinded; one goes ahead and one looks as one goes along. All I can advise the hon. member is that this has been one of the most stringent and one of the most dedicated appraisals.

There was mention this afternoon of this contract. I only wish that the members of this House realized the time and effort expended—and I am not just talking about the 9 to 5, I am talking weekends, I am talking midnight until 3 and 4 in the morning—in coming up with the particular evaluation that we said we would meet, as the member for Ottawa Centre mentioned, by April 1. It is now May 1, and we will meet it.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am simply stating that we have done everything possible. We have engaged the best experts in the world. We have used what I call the only way that one could arrive at a proper system—in other words, by having a competition which is akin to a tender. And this will result in our having the successful applicant named on May 1, and that is why we have this bill before the House.

I might mention, Mr. Chairman, that I did not need this particular bill had it just been a demonstration that we were going ahead with it. As I stated at the outset, the reason that we had to bring in this bill, very simply and very basically, was that we want to have all this within the power of this province, we want to own the rights, the technology, the expertise, the knowhow, the patents, and everything that goes along with it. So, Mr. Chairman, with that, I cannot go along with the member's particular amendment. Again, I would point out that we are not committing anything by passing this bill. The expenditures will be before the House during my estimates.

Mr. Cassidy: After you have signed the contract?

Hon. Mr. Carton: One has not seen the contract. One does not know what is in the contract. One does not know what escape clauses may be in that contract. All I am saying, Mr. Chairman, when one does not know, one cannot question what may be in them.

Mr. Chairman: Are you ready for the question?

Mr. Cassidy: No, I am not. Mr. Chairman, the minister says if only the members on this side of the House—and I presume he is speaking to his own backbenchers—could realize the time and the effort and the concern and the commitment that have gone into the evaluation of this project over the last three years.

There's a very simple way and it is provided for in this amendment—or some elaboration of it or some other kind of technique—by which, in fact, before the minister enters upon this contract, we would see the evaluation; we would see the process through which he has gone. He has not done that.

He has been working behind closed doors and therefore to try to palm off this House by saying if only we would appreciate the dedication—of course, they are dedicated! Sure, and I think they are probably having a ball. They are having fun going ahead and evaluating this and really getting into their various technical specialties.

The minister wants the House to be impressed by the list of features which are being evaluated, the sub-systems and that kind of thing which he very carefully read out to the House. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I would be surprised if they weren't doing that. I really would be, considering the extent of the investment which may flow from this.

What I am worried about, though, is that the big picture may be overlooked in all of this. I will give to the minister an illustration of this which I believe is accurate. In November, after, I believe, about three years of evaluation on the part of the government of these various systems, they were down from 250 to eight and eventually to three. The three you had were two systems which were prototypes or had never been tried or whatever. Anyway, there were two systems, which have at least hung in to the end, and a third system from Ford Motor Co. I guess you would call it a kind of a sky bus and it was subsequently withdrawn.

What impressed me about the Ford proposal was that apparently the prototype, which they had in service or else was, I believe, projected to be in service before very long in a new satellite city in the Detroit area, had a maximum speed of 12 mph. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I believe it is 30, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, 12 mph is the figure that I have. Possibly that's the service speed; the average speed. At any rate, 30 mph is a far cry from the 45 to 60 mph which the minister—

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly why they withdrew from the competition. They didn't want to meet our criteria.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, the point, though, is how on earth could this process of evaluation by all of these experts—with all of the expertise that the minister has been crowing about today in the House and at other times—have led them to come up with a system whose developer said, "We really don't think our system is capable of getting up to the kinds of requirements you have. Anyway, we are interested in something else"?

The degree of interest in other things on the part of Ford Motor Co. is debatable. I don't know; I am not privy to their internal councils. Certainly one of the things that obviously affected them was the extraordinary difficulty, if not the impossibility, of operating their system in order to meet the ministry's standards. How, then, could these experts have got to the point of putting Ford on the final short list of three? I don't know but that bothers me.

It seems to me again, Mr. Chairman, that the minister is totally enamoured of technology and he is not looking at—I don't know what you'd call it—the big picture. He is not looking at whether all of this technology is, in fact, necessary or desirable.

It would be nice to prove to the world that Ontario can be the first or second place in the world to have computer-controlled monitoring of these vehicles. That would be nice but at what cost, Mr. Chairman? How does that cost relate to the needs on a system of intermediate capacity?

The Victoria line in London to which the minister referred has, I believe, a capacity of something approaching 50,000 or 60,000 passengers per hour. It is an incredibly busy line and I presume that the trains must of necessity travel with very short headways in order to carry the kinds of loads that are carried by public transit in the city of London. Well, the line from Malvern through to Union Station is not quite the same as the Victoria line.

The minister states in answer to my comments about light rapid transit that the intermediate-capacity transit system does everything that light rapid transit does. I can reverse that and suggest to the minister that light rapid transit therefore does everything that intermediate-capacity rapid transit does with one exception, which the minister mentioned. That exception is that it is probably more environmentally acceptable to have an intermediate-capacity transit system than to have light rapid transit.

Well, fine. It would be more acceptable to me to drive a new car than to drive one that is five years old. However, I choose my priorities. And the minister is not coming clean because we have no means of judging what will be the cost of this one feature which he chose to mention in the House, the environmental acceptability—i.e., relatively less noise created by the proposed systems that he is considering.

If the minister can get the new systems and get them in for the same price as light rapid transit, then he should by all means go ahead. If they can come in possibly for a million or two more a mile and have slightly lower operating costs and more sex appeal to passengers—fine, that might be okay too.

But on the other hand, let's suppose that the minister can get twice as many miles of light rapid transit, if we want to engage in that one, for the same price as intermediate-capacity transit systems in the city of Toronto or elsewhere in the province. Let's suppose he can get twice as many miles for the same price, and that by the time you look at operating costs and other things like that the subsidies per passenger are the same—or even that the overall subsidy for a greater number of passengers on a bigger system would be the same as for one of the new systems that have been proposed.

At that point the environmental argument breaks down. You can't pay an infinite amount for noiselessness. At some point in effect you have to make a choice; you have to put a price on it.

Maybe it is worth $1 million or $2 million a mile, Mr. Chairman, but it would be nice at any rate if this House had information before it to enable it to judge whether the noiselessness that the minister wants is going to cost $1 million or $2 million a mile or $5 or $10 million a mile. If it is going to cost $5 or $10 million a mile, Mr. Chairman, then

I would say to the minister that we won't accept that, because we would feel that the government had got itself off on a technological limb and was not spending the taxpayers' money fairly and efficiently. We would feel the government was denying many people within the city of Toronto and other parts of the province transit service that it could have provided if it hadn't insisted on gold-plated standards and was, in fact, contributing to the overall level of urban noise, because the areas not serviced by the new system would continue to generate noise-producing automobile traffic, which could be avoided with the supposedly noisier LRT system that might cover far more miles.

I wonder specifically whether the minister would agree to table in this House the studies of light rapid transit that have been done with the Toronto Transit Commission and could he say when those studies were made, and by whom.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I'll check into that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Cassidy: Does the minister know when that study was made? Was it made in the last few months? Or was it made two or three years ago? Or was it made five years ago?

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, Mr. Chairman. All I'm advised is that it was made.

Mr. Cassidy: In other words the minister himself has not been seized with it and has not really come to grips with it?

Well, will the minister agree to table those studies when they can be dug out from their dust-infested files?

Will the minister agree?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, the minister advised the hon. member, and he full well knows, that he can go up to Downsview and speak to the ministry officials up there and any of the material that he wanted would be available.

Mr. Cassidy: With great respect, Mr. Chairman, the minister has just gone through an elaborate and unnecessary exercise in the House, denying the House even a ball park estimate of the cost of the projected demonstration project down at the CNE. As the minister knows I have made a number of attempts to go to Downsview and they have so far been unsuccessful.

I will be happy to accept his invitation. However, I think he is dissembling, after denying information to the House, to tell me that as an individual member I can go and get any information I want from his people at Downsview.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I have not denied information to the House.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister has.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I have explained to the hon. member and he is being very devious. He knows at the outset I pointed out that I would in no way jeopardize negotiations that were presently going on. I cannot; I would be abdicating my responsibility as minister if I did so, and I have no intention of being lured into that.

Mr. Chairman: Any further questions?

Mr. Cassidy: No, Mr. Chairman, just to conclude that point, I think it has gone on long enough. The minister—

Mr. Chairman: Order please! We are becoming very repetitive now, so just—

Mr. Cassidy: No, just come back to the minister—

Mr. Chairman: Order please! If the member has something to add, he may continue. If it is repetitive, then no.

Mr. Givens: Why doesn't the Chairman apply closure on the member?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I simply don't understand what the minister is saying. He seems to be saying that I can have information at Downsview that he isn't willing to reveal to the House, and I don't really understand how that jibes at all.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question?

Those in favour of Mr. Cassidy's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

I declare the amendment lost.

Any further comments, questions, or amendments to any other section of this bill? Then we have one motion to dispose of.

Call in the members.

The committee divided on Mr. Cassidy's amendment, which was negatived on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 30, the "nays" are 54.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost; and the bill as amended shall be reported.

Bill 54, as amended, reported.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report one bill with certain amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

INCOME TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1973

Mr. Walker, in the absence of Mr. Grossman, moves second reading of Bill 96, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, 1973.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that the parliamentary assistant, the hon. member for London North (Mr. Walker), is going to pilot this bill through the House, I wonder if the House would agree that the member might sit on this side of the House for that purpose. I think it will facilitate debate.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): He has our agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Do the hon. members agree?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It is going to go to all their heads over there.

Mr. Speaker: Do the hon. members agree to that?

The hon. member for London North may then be seated on the other side of the House. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think that we would benefit from some preliminary remarks on behalf of the government by the parliamentary assistant. The complexities of the bill, dealing with mutual funds and so forth, is one area that in my view would benefit from some elucidation; and I would ask the parliamentary assistant if he would be prepared to make some preliminary remarks before we go further.

Mr. G. W. Walker (London North): Mr. Speaker, basically, the amendments contained in Bill 96 are housekeeping amendments.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): We sure have heard that line before.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Well, he's on his way to the top.

Mr. Walker: Section 1 in Bill 96 is basically an approach to avoid double taxation in respect of mutual funds. The other matters are truly housekeeping and basically redefine matters relating to the property tax credit, involving the definitions of occupancy cost in section 2; in section 3 principal residence; and regarding foreign diplomats, in section 4, excluding them from the benefits accruing under the property tax credit system where they do not pay income tax; in section 5 allowing for the seizure by the appropriate federal minister of the tax credit where there are other liabilities or responsibilities; and in section 6, in respect of life tenants related to section 2 and section 3.

With respect to the amendment to section 3, which is paragraph 1 of Bill 96, mutual funds are, of course, taxed at present in two particular circumstances. They're taxed when the benefit accrues to the mutual fund; and secondly taxed as a capital gain to the individual unit holder when they are distributed to him as a dividend. This will avoid a double taxation by allowing for a refund, to the mutual fund, of the capital gains tax that it would have paid.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: If it's all right with him it's all right with me.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I was fascinated by the explanation that was given. Would the parliamentary assistant give us a mathematical example of the proportion which is contained in section 1 of the bill? It's so abundantly clear from the language that it would be helpful for all of us to understand that mathematical proportion more clearly.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I can give both the—

Mr. Speaker: I should point out that on the second reading of the bill, the debate should be completed by all members who wish to participate. Perhaps if the hon. member for Riverdale has any other comments he would like to make?

Mr. Renwick: I was hoping, Mr. Speaker, to perhaps avoid the bill having to go into committee in order to obtain that explanation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: I take it that, in fact, the budget is correct, that this is of minimal revenue significance to the Province of Ontario and that it's introduced for the purpose of paralleling in the Income Tax Act of the Province of Ontario similar provisions which are contained in the federal Income Tax Act. I take it that that's the principal reason for the mutual fund provision.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: No, it is not.

Mr. Renwick: Now with respect to the property tax reduction, the only point in it that I could ask for some comment about is that I see now that the Treasurer is required to apply it not only to any arrearers of income tax of the taxpayer before he gives consideration to actually paying it to the taxpayer, but he is also required to apply it to any arrearers in which the taxpayer may be with respect to the Canada Pension Plan or with respect to any obligations which he may have under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I can, perhaps, understand why the Treasurer would not refund the tax directly to the taxpayer with respect to interest charges and other penalties which he is obligated to pay under the Income Tax Act of Canada or of the Province of Ontario. That seems to me to make very good sense. But if the Province of Ontario is granting a credit to a taxpayer in Ontario with respect, for practical purposes, to his Ontario portion of the federal income tax, I do not see any reason he should be required to have it applied first of all to any amount that he may owe under two other federal statutes, namely, the Canada Pension and Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Acts, both of which are federal statutes.

We all know that at the present time, once an application is made of an amount of money otherwise due to a taxpayer to meet other liabilities of that taxpayer to the government, the possibility of the taxpayer contesting the right of the government to so apply it is minimal with respect to Canada Pension Plan payments and with respect to unemployment insurance payments.

There are procedures by which he can appeal matters with respect to income tax application of funds otherwise due to him. With the present operation of the unemployment insurance plan there is no real way in which he can claim to get the money back because there is no recognized appeal procedure.

It would seem to me that while there is justification for providing that, before paying to the taxpayer the credit accruing to him, the Treasurer may apply it against moneys which are due under the Income Tax Act, there appears to be no justification for amending this Act to provide for the application of those funds by the Treasurer of Ontario to amounts which are stated by the government of Canada to be owing under the Canada Pension Plan or under the unemployment insurance plan, having regard to the very poor administrative appeal procedures available to a taxpayer under both the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Acts.

That is not to cast any reflection upon the validity of the basic principle of the Canada Pension Plan or the unemployment insurance plan. I certainly don't think that the Treasurer of Ontario, with money in his hands otherwise owing to an Ontario taxpayer, should first of all look to the federal government to have the federal government tell him whether that taxpayer owes money to the federal government with respect to the Canada Pension Plan or unemployment insurance.

It would appear to me to be perfectly clear that the government of Canada can look after itself with respect to collecting moneys due from a taxpayer under the Canada Pension Plan and under the Unemployment Insurance Acts without having an assist from the Treasurer of Ontario about a credit which is established in Ontario for Ontario taxpayers with respect to the income tax liability of Ontario citizens to the Province of Ontario for income tax which is collected by the federal government.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: So say we all.

Mr. Renwick: If I were to go on, if it weren't this hour of the night, I would almost feel that we had hit upon a matter of basic principle.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North was first.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say a word regarding this principle whereby credit accruing to an Ontario taxpayer may be used for the purpose outlined by the previous speaker, that is to pay any deficiency in federal income tax, unemployment or Canada Pension payments.

The principle is deficient in this bill in that it does not provide that the first and basic purpose for which that credit should be used is to apply it to any arrears of municipal taxes. If there are arrears in municipal taxes it precludes the possibility of the person making that application in the first place—

Mr. Lewis: It should not be applied to anything.

Mr. Good: —with the result that those who need this tax credit most cannot receive the benefit if they have not paid their municipal taxes. And if they have not paid their municipal taxes and they are paid in the following year, then they can apply for the tax credit covering the two years' taxes. But the person then loses the one basic $90 credit which he would have had in each of the two years if it's applied to one year.

It has been brought to my attention already at this early date, in the first year of operation, that in the case of some families—and I am speaking in particular of one instance on welfare—and senior citizens unable to pay their taxes in 1972, the welfare department has now made arrangements where both 1972 and 1973 taxes will be paid in 1973, but the person who needs the payment most is losing the $90 basic tax credit for 1972.

The principle here is very deficient, in that this money can be used to pay federal charges against a person; but the one basic charge, which is a municipal charge and one in which the property tax credit should first apply, is completely neglected. I think this is a great deficiency in this legislation. I have spoken to the people in the department about it, they agree that there is a deficiency here, and I think the principle of this bill should be changed so that it includes that one point.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): It's good enough for him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, there is just one area in which I would like to make a few comments, and that is with respect to subsection (3) of clause 2. Now, in subsection (3) I note from the explanatory notes that there is a definition which is changed; in addition, it provides, as the notes say, "for the exclusion from eligibility for a property tax credit of foreign diplomats who are exempt from income tax."

It would appear that in a situation where visiting professors are involved at various universities and colleges, there are on occasion exemptions given from the payment of income tax or arrangements made for other tax advantages, much in the same form, I presume, as foreign diplomats are taken care of. If these exemptions are given for, say, a two-year term, occasionally we have seen that the presumed visiting professor decides to extend his or her visit and remains within the country, having had a certain benefit, especially with respect to tax payments.

I am wondering if the parliamentary assistant might consider the problem of persons such as certain visiting professors who receive this additional benefit, which may not prove to be recoverable when they change their minds and decide to remain.

It is understandable that a foreign diplomat may be posted to or from Canada on fairly short notice; this is part of the job. But I think that where a visiting professor is involved, it may be more a matter of personal decision than the requirements of the job to remain in the country. If that personal decision does take place, it would seem unrealistic to me to allow this tax benefit to continue if in fact the advantage which has been given to this individual because of a presumed short-term commitment is now extended to the individual's advantage by that person's own decision.

I think that if some consideration were given to that possible abuse, the section could better resolve the problem that you are attempting to solve.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise one point with the parliamentary assistant, and it has to do with the definition of occupancy cost. I have been in touch with the minister and I would have hoped that, at this time, when we are amending the bill, the definition would be more clearly defined and that some of the inequities were taken out of what occupancy cost means.

If I might cite an example of a person who lives in his own dwelling, he is allowed to use only that portion of his cost which is purely taxes, whereas a person living in an apartment and who probably has heat supplied and water supplied and parking supplied, this is calculated in his rental agreement and he takes 20 per cent of this portion, and he does then get an advantage over a person who is living in his own home. And then you have a third category of a person living in an older apartment who pays rent and who pays hydro and who pays water outside of his rental factor, and these figures for water and hydro are not taken into consideration when calculating his 20 per cent rental.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Good point.

Mr. Germa: So it seems to me that the person who gets the major advantage, and gets a disproportionate advantage, is the person who lives in a newer highrise apartment, where all services are included in the total rental package. He, in fact, is being subsidized for hydro, water, parking and maybe a steam bath and maybe a common room and swimming pool, and all the amenities which go with highrise living.

I just wondered what the parliamentary assistant would have to say on this. Has the minister taken this into consideration? And why weren't the proper amendments made here to more equitably define what occupancy costs really are?

Mr. Bounsall: Good point. Spell it out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, there is great difficulty in interpreting certain points in relation to the benefits that come back, insofar as they discriminate as between married couples and people who are living together who are not married.

As I try to work my way through clause 2, it seems to me that the government is carrying forward the principle that if a married couple is going to be entitled to claim any rebate, then they must take into account, even though they are both working, the higher salary of the two spouses. If the husband is making more money than the wife, and he is making a sufficient amount of money so that his income would not entitle him to any rebate, notwithstanding what kind of a salary the wife might be making, the rebate is gone.

Now, by contrast, if two people are living together, both their incomes can be taken into consideration, and they can benefit from the lower income, and distribute whatever benefit comes back as between themselves.

This was drawn forcibly to my attention by a young lady who finds herself in this position—and I see nothing in this statute that changes it at all; in fact it makes it even more clear. She pointed out to me that even though she had a reasonable job she wasn't making as much as her husband and therefore they were denied any possibility of getting any benefit back from such a claim in dollars and cents. She came to the conclusion that, if she divorced her husband but continued to live with him common-law, because of the unusual wording of this statute she would then be entitled to claim a rebate which she is not now entitled to claim.

I have—not with me tonight but I will have them when we send this bill to committee—the extracts from the instructions that are given which bear this out. I have tried to relate the definitions in section 2 to the existing instructions where it seems to me that this very serious inequity is perpetrated.

I don't understand, Mr. Speaker, for the life of me, how it makes sense that when the rebates are figured out, the married couple is penalized when both of them are working, but that two people who are not married, who are living together are not treated in the same manner. It's an anomaly that makes no sense whatsoever.

While the hour is getting late and we are getting close to the adjournment hour I would leave this with the hon. parliamentary assistant so that by the time we come back on Thursday, he can perhaps clarify my thinking if I am wrong. By that time I will have with me extracts from the instructions that this government sends out, which I think makes it quite clear.

The situation as it appears to me is most inequitable. The situation is not clarified or improved by the statute, and it is most unfair and one would have thought with all of the intelligent advice available to the minister that they would have cleared up this obvious unfair anomaly.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the hour, I wonder if we should have a motion to adjourn the debate.

Mr. Stokes moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, before I move the adjournment of the House, on Thursday we will return to a consideration of the bill that is before us and I would hope to call item No. 17, Bill 98.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Once again we are pleased to have visitors with us. In the east gallery we have students from Winston Churchill Collegiate Institute of Scarborough; in the west gallery students from Mt. Mary Academy of Ancaster and West Prep Public School of Toronto; and in both galleries students from Madonna High School of Downsview. At 3 o'clock, p.m., in the east gallery, we will be joined by students from Glendale High School of Hamilton and in both galleries students from Stayner High School of Stayner. Today in the Speaker's gallery we have a very special group of people, a group of international junior curlers from Sweden, Scotland, Norway, Switzerland and West Germany.

Statements by the ministry.

EXTENSION OF DON VALLEY PARKWAY

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, in response to a resolution of the Metropolitan Toronto council on April 17, 1973, requesting that the ministry undertake construction of the extension of the Don Valley Parkway north to Steeles Ave., I met yesterday with the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto, Mr. Ab Campbell, and members of his council and staff; the chairman of the regional municipality of York, Mr. Garfield Wright, and members of his council and staff; Mayor Mel Lastman of the borough of North York and members of his council and staff; Mrs. Gladys Rolling, the mayor of East Gwillimbury township, and the member for York North (Mr. W. Hodgson).

Both the borough of North York and the regional municipality of York have, for some time, been pressing for the completion of Highway 404. Their position was reaffirmed at this meeting. The ministry now proposes to construct a four-lane arterial road with intersections at grade, from Highway 401 to Steeles Ave., reducing to two lanes on the Highway 404 alignment northerly to Newmarket, which is Davis Dr.

While the original plans for Highway 404 provided for an ultimate freeway development, the ministry proposed to those present that for the following reasons we undertake stage construction now but acquire property for future development of a transportation service corridor with provisions for future rapid transit if it is found necessary. The reasons for this proposal are: It will provide much-needed relief for the traffic congestion north of Highway 401 to Newmarket; stage construction will provide us with the opportunity to develop future plans as a result of the recommendations of the Metro plan review now under way; with stage construction we will be able to effect early relief of traffic congestion and protect our future transportation options by constructing additional facilities when and if traffic demands warrant them; the need to exercise financial restraint at this time makes stage construction desirable, in that the cost is less than half that of a full freeway from Highway 401 to Newmarket.

I would again draw your attention to the fact that this proposal provides for early relief of traffic congestion in this area and at the same time keeps our options open for future transportation developments.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement in connection with a bill which I am intending to introduce later this afternoon and which will provide some substantial assistance to those people whose property has been affected by the current high levels of the Great Lakes.

This bill, which will be known as the Shoreline Property Assistance Act, 1973, will provide a procedure for those municipalities affected to make loans to individual property owners for the rehabilitation and protection of shoreline property and for the repair of damage to buildings and other structures which has been caused either by the high water levels, by the impact of ice, or as a result of damage or erosion to the shore.

Under this legislation, $50 million will be made available from the provincial Treasury for the purchase of municipal debentures for this purpose, thereby enabling the municipalities in turn to provide direct assistance to those whose property has been affected. Such assistance will take the form of municipal loans for the construction of retaining walls, dikes, breakwaters, groynes, cribs and other structures designed for the rehabilitation and/or the protection of property on lakes, rivers or other bodies of water whose shores have been damaged or eroded by the elements.

This will include repairs and improvements to any existing works of this kind. As I have indicated, it will also include repairs to any buildings or other structures which have been required on account of damage to the buildings or structures caused by high water levels, ice or erosion of the shore. Loans for such repairs, however, will not exceed 90 per cent of the total cost of the repairs or the maximum amount which will be prescribed by regulation, whichever is the less.

As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, this money will certainly provide substantial assistance to those people whose property has been affected in this manner and I trust that the legislation will be dealt with expeditiously by the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

WILD RICE FROM NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, today I have placed on each member's desk and delivered to our friends in the press gallery one of the most interesting products of our resources production programme and one which is produced almost exclusively in northwestern Ontario—a package of wild rice.

Wild rice was used by the Indians in the Lake of the Woods area long before Europeans came to North America. Today in Ontario it continues to be harvested largely by Indian people with their traditional techniques.

Last year there was a large harvest due to good water levels and excellent weather conditions. Over 1,000,000 lb of natural wild rice was harvested. It brought about $650,000 to the Indian pickers and added much more to the economy of that region.

Processing of wild rice is now being carried out in the region, partly through the assistance of loans made available through the Northern Ontario Development Corp.

It is the objective of my ministry to encourage full utilization of this unique and highly prized product.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Why doesn't the minister help them process it themselves?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are.

Mr. Stokes: And get more money out of it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There is, of course, growing competition from the agricultural paddy wild rice development in the border states of the United States, and we too have been carrying out some development in this particular area.

As part of our programme to make more people aware of this product and to use it as a gourmet food the booklet, "Man-O-Min," meaning wild rice in Ojibway, is also being distributed. This booklet contains a number of recipes, some of which have been developed in northwestern Ontario; 10 of them have been examined and checked by the Ontario Food Council of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

I recommend this northwestern Ontario gourmet product to the members and, of course, to the members of the press gallery, and know that after they have tried this excellent sample, they will be looking for more. Of course, it can be obtained from the address shown on the bag and from others in northwestern Ontario.

FOREST FIRES

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the members that the period from April 1 to Oct. 31 each year is the official forest fire season. During the past few years an average of 1,500 forest fires have burned approximately 51,000 acres during this same period.

Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, most of Ontario experienced an unusually mild winter, particularly in northern and northwestern portions of this province. Precipitation in northern and northwestern Ontario during the winter months was approximately 20 per cent below normal. The rest of the province received near normal precipitation.

Similarly, ground moisture is somewhat below normal in the north and northwest and is normal in the south. Recent mild spring temperatures and the early disappearance of much of the snow have resulted in greater than usual evaporation. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, the forests and fields, with associated fuels, are much drier at this time of the year than is normal.

It is estimated that spring breakup and the resulting spring forest fire occurrence is two to three weeks ahead of normal. As a result, our fire control staff are expecting an above-average occurrence of forest fires in 1973 and are gearing themselves accordingly. This situation became apparent by mid-April of this year when 75 wild forest fires had been reported, consuming 360 acres of forest land. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, early indications, combined with past experience and statistical analysis, suggest that 1973 may be a very hazardous fire year.

In addition to our normal fire suppression capability, this year for the first time we will have in operation an additional four Grumman Tracker aircraft converted as fire bombers using liquid retardants. These aircraft will be based at Dryden and Sudbury but will be available to fly from any of the eight retardant bases situated across the province. Each aircraft has a retardant load capacity of 800 gal. and an air speed of 200 mph. We anticipate that these aircraft will further add to our ability to combat fires in their incipient stage.

Mr. Stokes: We need more airstrips for that.

CONSUMER REPORTING ACT

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce to the House today our intention to introduce this afternoon a revised Act to Control the Storage and Supply of Personal Information for Rating Purposes, known in its short form as the Consumer Reporting Act.

As the hon. members will recall, my ministry first introduced this Act last autumn. Our purpose at that time was to stimulate informed comment on how the Ontario government should move to protect the consumer from inaccurate, outdated or indiscriminately used information about his personal lifestyle or credit rating. We received a number of briefs from the consumer reporting industry and from consumer groups and interested individuals.

Having considered this comment, we have made some changes in the legislation. In some cases we have attempted to make it easier for the consumer reporting agency to comply with the intent of the Act. In other cases we have heeded the complaints that have been made about some aspects of the consumer reporting industry and we have increased the degree of protection offered to the consumer.

But the two most important provisions of the first draft remain. First, we are recommending that powerful procedures be established to provide full disclosure to the consumer of information about him assembled by consumer reporting agencies. Second, we believe that consumer reporting agencies should be fully accountable to the consumer for the accuracy and fairness of their information.

In our view it is a necessary step toward balancing the growing power of consumer reporting with the rights of individual consumers. In addition, we believe that possible legal action for damages will provide a strong incentive for consumer reporting agencies to adopt the best possible reporting procedures.

The new Act includes one major new provision: investigators working for consumer reporting agencies, as well as the agencies themselves, will be made subject to government registration. We believe that government evaluation and control of those engaged in the investigation of consumers will lead to higher standards of conduct.

But it is the requirement for disclosure to the consumer that most clearly identifies our legislation with the need for greater consumer protection. We believe that if the consumer is informed when a file on him is used, and if he is able to check and dispute its contents without fear or confusion, then his right to accurate information and responsible reporting will be assured. To this end, the following disclosure procedures are contained in the Consumer Reporting Act:

1. Anyone rating a consumer for credit, employment, insurance or other business purposes, must upon the request of the consumer, inform him whether or not a consumer report has been referred to and if so, the name and address of the agency supplying the report.

2. Anyone requesting a report containing personal information must inform the person about whom the report is being made before the request for the report. Personal information is defined as information about the consumer's character, health or lifestyle. It is considered separately from credit information, which is defined as factual information about a consumer's address, place of work, credit balance and income. The Act addresses itself to the accuracy in disclosure of both credit and personal information.

3. Notice must be given in credit applications that a consumer report will be requested.

4. When a benefit is denied or an increased charge assessed because of information in a consumer report, the consumer must be informed of that fact as well as the report, his right to be informed of its contents and the name of the consumer reporting agency supplying it. If the information comes from sources other than a consumer reporting agency, the user must inform the consumer of the nature of the information if he requests it.

5. Consumer reporting agencies must, on written request, show a consumer his file. At a minimum the file must contain the sources of all credit information, the names of all recipients of a report within the previous six months in the case of credit information and within the past 12 months in the case of personal information, and copies of the actual written reports made or particulars of the contents of any oral reports.

6. Disclosure of the sources of personal information will be required, but only if requested by the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal.

7. Finally, when a consumer reporting agency adds, changes or deletes information following a dispute with the consumer, the agency must send a notice of the change to all those who received a copy of the unamended report within the 60 days previous to the change. The amendment must also be sent to any other person who received the unamended report within the previous six months in the case of credit information and within the previous year for reports containing personal information, as directed by the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, the Consumer Reporting Act will have a number of other important provisions. Every consumer reporting agency will be required to adopt all procedures reasonable for insuring the greatest possible accuracy and fairness of its reports. Unfavourable information based on evidence that is not corroborated must have the lack of corroboration noted in the file and all reasonable efforts must be taken to substantiate such information.

Generally speaking, information on judgements, criminal convictions and single bankruptcies which are more than seven years old will not be permitted in the reports. Judgements that remain outstanding will require the creditor's name, address and the amount owed.

Information on writs issued against the consumer must be updated yearly and writs more than seven years old will not be permitted in the report. Restrictions will be placed upon the availability of a consumer's file, and legal sanctions will be imposed against indiscriminate use of a file or false reporting of information for use in a consumer report.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Did the minister skip section 37?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, the consumer will be able to initiate procedures to amend his file by application to a registrar of consumer reporting agencies in my ministry if he fails to get satisfaction from the reporting agency. Subject to the decisions of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal, my ministry will have the power under the Act to revoke the registration and right to operate of those agencies or agency investigators who violate the terms of the Act.

These are only some of the provisions of this Act, which promises to increase substantially the individual's right to be represented fairly and accurately when decisions are being made that affect his life. We intend to do away with secret reports or inaccurate reports based on hearsay. We propose to limit the kind of information permissible, set standards for its quality and control access to it.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that only by bringing the entire consumer reporting industry out into the open shall we prevent abuses and ensure the individual his right to fair treatment. To fail to do so would invest too much arbitrary power in too few hands and risk far too much to potentially faulty reporting and storage procedures.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I neglected to mention at the outset that at that particular meeting, the mayor of Markham, Tony Roman, was in attendance.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Why didn't the minister invite me?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I didn't invite anyone. I invited only Metro and the region. Whoever was invited was invited by those two particular districts.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The member was specifically excluded as a member of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

The hon. member for Downsview.

EXTENSION OF DON VALLEY PARKWAY

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In light of his statement about the extension of the Don Valley Parkway at the expense of the government of Ontario, does that mean that the clearly announced policy that cities are for people and not for cars has now been abandoned, or is it just being modified?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I had expected that question.

Mr. Singer: Yes, I thought the minister would.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): The minister's conscience is bothering him.

Mr. Lewis: He must have an answer ready then.

Hon. Mr. Carton: This means that cities are, and will continue to be, for people. This is a four-lane arterial; this is not a freeway or expressway.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I see. Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary, could the minister tell me if the people of Ontario are going to be entitled to rely on this statement to a greater extent than they could rely on a contract signed by Mr. MacNaughton when he was Minister of Highways, which apparently guaranteed the building of Spadina?

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Spadina is dead!

Mr. Singer: The member only wishes it.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Downsview knows full well, that contract was signed, as he stated, by the previous minister—

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —and, in fact, if Metro had gone ahead in 1969 the Spadina would have been built. Metro stopped the Spadina for review—

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Now the government is blaming Metro!

Hon. Mr. Carton: It led to those particular representations being made, which in turn—

Mr. Roy: That's not what the Premier (Mr. Davis) said.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —led to the OMB decision, which in turn led to the appeal to the cabinet, which then cancelled the Spadina Expressway.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: What is the difference between a four-lane arterial and a four-lane expressway?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Spelling.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): A very interesting question.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Well, first of all, with a four-lane arterial there are streets and roads that come on to it.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, and overpasses come on to expressways.

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, they do not. For example, on Highway 401 there are just overpasses at interchanges. There are no signalized intersections.

Mr. Lewis: As there are on the Queen Elizabeth Way. Or does the minister call the QEW an arterial highway?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Those are service roads.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, those are service roads! They don't attach at street level? Come on!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of a further supplementary to the minister, why does the ministry feel it is important to provide greater relief to the east side of Metro when no relief at all is being provided to the west side of Metro?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): They vote better.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): It's not for Metro. This is for the region of York.

Mr. Shulman: They vote better too.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that we are providing service to the northwestern part.

When the decision is made with respect to the subway, this will be built; in addition, we are having a dial-a-bus demonstration project in the northwestern part of Metro. We are looking after them, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: And kiddy-cars at the Exhibition.

Interjections by hon. members.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Government Services in relation to the announcement that he made this afternoon. Regarding the money that is going to be advanced to municipalities, which they can use by debenture, are the municipal taxpayers going to have to pay the interest on those debentures?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker, the interest on the debentures will be paid by the borrower of the funds.

Mr. Singer: By way of a supplementary, and further to the minister's statement, when these moneys are being lent to taxpayers whose property has been damaged, are there going to be any criteria established which will require the relocation or rebuilding of buildings that might have been damaged in locations that apparently will be safe? Or are we going to allow this kind of expenditure on locations where properties can be damaged by floods? What I have in mind, particularly, is the kind of work that was done after Hurricane Hazel, when the conservation authorities came in and said: "You can't build on certain low-lying lands now and for ever more." Has the government considered this facet at all?

Hon. Mr. Snow: First of all, Mr. Speaker, this Act doesn't provide funds specifically for rebuilding any buildings that have been totally damaged. The funds will pertain to repairs to a building that has been damaged to some degree. I'm sure if a building were damaged, or even for the repairs, a building permit may very well be required or probably will be required for the repairs or for the rebuilding of the structure. I'm sure the regulations of the municipality and those of the conservation authorities regarding building in flood-plain lands would or could prevent the building of a building if it were not in the right location.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary, the kind of emergent action that originated from the tragedy caused by Hurricane Hazel brought about a whole new line of thinking. The kind of information I'm now seeking from the minister is whether or not, in view of the province's commitment to supply, I think up to $50 million, this should be bound up with some kind of rethinking as to the location of the damaged building.

Is this kind of thinking going on or is he going to expect hopefully that either building inspectors or conservation authorities, which now have enough jobs, are going to step in? Should he not have specific criteria which will govern the granting of these loans to make sure that when buildings are rebuilt or repaired they will be built in a safe place where this kind of damage likely will not occur again?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, the major reason for this bill, of course, is for the protection of the shoreline itself. There is a section, a part of the bill, that provides funds for the repairs to buildings and structures.

The main impact of the bill will be to protect the actual shoreline to allow people to build sea walls or groynes or put in armour-stone or whatever might be the appropriate type of shoreline protection in the particular instance. Because there have been buildings with some damage caused by the flooding or by the breaking of a dike, then the Act also will provide funds for the repairs to that particular building.

As the member will see when it is presented, the Act will call for the application to be made to the municipalities. So, certainly, this would give some authority to the municipalities to have some control if they felt the particular building should not be built at that location.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, may I have a supplementary? May I ask the minister, with regard to the shores of Lake Erie where there was flooding and where 3,600 septic tanks have been made useless on account of the flooding conditions, will the people be able to benefit by that programme he has announced this afternoon to replace those septic tanks that have been made useless by the flooding?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I hadn't been aware or thought of that particular aspect, Mr. Speaker, but if the damage has been caused by flooding, I don't see why they would not be able to make use of this particular method of financing, although really we are looking at assisting people with repairs or protection of a more major nature. I'm doubtful very much whether the average homeowner would want to go through this process of long-term financing for a relatively minor repair of a few hundred dollars to a septic tank.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Don Mills, a supplementary?

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: All right.

Mr. Timbrell: Could the minister indicate whether the debt limits of the municipalities involved, which are established by the Ontario Municipal Board, will in any way limit the amount of money which they will be able to get out of this $50 million fund?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this bill calls for approval as usual by the Ontario Municipal Board. We have discussed the matter with the OMB. It does really become a debt of the municipality to the province, covered by the debt of the landowner to the municipality. The provincial Treasurer will purchase the debentures from the municipality; so I'm sure the Ontario Municipal Board will take this into account. But I can't assure the hon. member that it will not have any effect whatsoever on the credit rating of a municipality.

Mr. Deans: One final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Will it be necessary for the municipalities to go through all the normal procedures with regard to advertising in order to take advantage of the issuing of the debentures? Will they have to advertise and receive the approval of the OMB, prior to the borrowing of the money from the province in order to lend it out?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, the bill calls for the bylaw to be passed by the municipality and to be registered at the registry office for that county or area, and then to be forwarded on registration to the Ontario Municipal Board for approval. The OMB has assured us that it has been dealing with these in a very prompt manner.

Mr. Deans: What happens if there are hearings?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since Dr. Moss, the medical officer of health, has indicated that the flooding on the Toronto Islands has, in effect, rendered useless the whole of the septic tank and drainage system, requiring a complete replacement before people can even use the islands for normal recreational purposes to the same extent as in the past, will the assistance to which the minister is now referring be available for that kind of situation?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I can't exactly say, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, the Toronto Islands are publicly owned property. This Act pertains to assistance for privately owned property and does not really take into consideration publicly owned property. It's not designed for publicly owned property. My colleagues are looking at other programmes that may assist us in that area.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary and on the same point: Would the minister, in light of the questions and in light of the vagueness of some of the information he has given, not be best advised to take this back and rethink it a bit and perhaps lay down more definite criteria so that while provincial money is being used, it should be made available to publicly owned land and should be made available only where we aren't going to recreate the same kind of risk? Granted that there is an urgency to take some kind of action, wouldn't it be better that another look be had at this whole problem with some of these ideas in mind?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I don't think so, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that perhaps the member might wish to look at the legislation, once I have a chance to introduce it, before he suggests too many changes to it. This legislation is designed for assistance to private property owners and there are other things available or being considered for publicly owned lands.

Mr. Singer: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will permit one more supplementary.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the minister if the assistance is going to be available only to Canadian residents or will Americans be allowed, too, to get this financial assistance?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, the way the bill is drafted at this time there are no restrictions. It is not a subsidized programme; it is designed to assist in the protection of Canadian or Ontario lands regardless of the owner. This will be discussed, of course.

NORTH PICKERING DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Singer: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Is he able to tell the House at this point in time anything more about the hearings in relation to North Pickering than he was able to tell us on April 17?

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the House on April 17 exactly what the government's position was at that time, and I am sure that within the next week or 10 days we'll have a full announcement relating to the development in North Pickering which will answer more specifically the question by the member for Downsview.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

MERCURY TASK FORCE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food: When does his ministry intend to act on the specific recommendations of the mercury pollution task force relating to northwestern Ontario and provide food or food substitute to the Indian population on the affected reserves?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I understand there'll be a statement made in the very near future on that.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask by way of supplementary: Is the minister willing to indicate to the House, without giving details, that, in fact, he will be providing food as is requested in this instance?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, we'll await the statement which will be made shortly.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): A supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary—oh go ahead!

Mr. Reid: A supplementary: Can the minister indicate exactly when that statement is going to be made? Is it going to be made at the end of this week or next week? Surely three years of inaction should be brought to an end?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): The government will wait until they starve.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It'll be made very shortly; I expect tomorrow.

APPOINTMENT OF WOMEN TO ARBITRATION PANEL AND LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. Lewis: A question, largely out of curiosity, as a follow-up to the Minister of Labour: Has the Minister of Labour yet found it within his power to appoint a woman to the arbitration panel in the Province of Ontario beyond the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), and to appoint a woman to the Ontario Labour Relations Board?

Mr. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, not as yet, but I wish to assure my hon. friend that I did correspond with 10 or 12 possible nominees and we are awaiting replies. We did receive a couple of replies, but we are still waiting to hear from eight or 10 of them.

Mr. Lewis: I will await with interest the minister's appointments.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Government Services: Can he indicate to the House how many trips he took on government planes in the last year, the year 1972, and whether he took friends, relatives or departmental officials with him?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I can't recall exactly how many such trips I took, but I assure the member that if I am called upon to do so by the public accounts committee I will be prepared to give it full details.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: With the greatest of respect to the public accounts committee, the Legislature is almost of commensurate power. Would the minister be willing to indicate to the House the number of trips he took and with whom he travelled in the year 1972?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I can't tell the member offhand how many I took, but I will—

Mr. Lewis: Will the minister get that information for us?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I will take it under consideration.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Oh, come on!

Mr. Lewis: Well, will the minister table it in the House; and if not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly get the information. As I say, I feel it is a matter that can more properly be supplied to the public accounts committee, which is considering last year's expenditures.

Mr. Lewis: Well, if the cabinet one by one wants to go before the public accounts committee no one will deny them that right, I am sure.

Mr. MacDonald: An interesting procession.

Mr. Lewis: An interesting procession, yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Line up to the left!

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Minister of Revenue how often he used government aircraft, and with whom he travelled in the year 1972?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague gave the correct response to that. I would think it is more a matter for the public accounts committee. If the public accounts committee wants the information then I will find out and get the information for the public accounts committee.

I can assure the hon. member that anything that was done was done properly.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Revenue whether he was privy to any information as to whether the government is going to have its majority on the public accounts committee forbid this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not privy to any such information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could enlighten the hon. member with respect to his last question? I have been with the public accounts committee from 12:30 to 2 o'clock today and we did, in fact, discuss my use of government aircraft. There was no attempt made, I can assure you, on behalf of government members to block any part of that discussion.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer was likely there in his capacity as provincial Treasurer before the committee, but the others won't all automatically be there, so that this among other questions might be asked. So my question is: Is the government going to use its majority in the committee to deny calling each of the ministers to come before it?

Hon. Mr. White: Hardly!

Mr. MacDonald: The minister says "hardly". Hardly what?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, has the member ever known the government not to make full representation when required by the public accounts committee?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, since the minister asked the question. That is why I am asking it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Well, we have known the minister to reverse his position, so it runs to much the same thing.

TORONTO DOWNTOWN HOUSING

Mr. Lewis: One last question briefly of the Minister of Revenue: Is it his intention to consult further with the Hydro block working committee in the determination of the housing project for that section of downtown Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, apparently the hon. member hasn't been kept up to date as to what is going on. There have been quite a number of meetings. As a matter of fact the steering committee was set up, on which residents had representation. Two aldermen of the city council also are on the steering committee.

I understand, as a matter of fact, they had their latest meeting 2½ weeks ago. So they're all being consulted—they have been all the way through the piece—and I am hopeful that we will get a recommendation from them pretty soon, because, as the hon. member knows, every week that goes by means about an additional $5,000 in cost.

Mr. Lewis: No questions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Natural Resources has the answer to a question previously asked.

FLIGHT OVER ESCARPMENT

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question asked of me by the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor)—I thought I saw him here a moment ago.

An hon. member: Don't worry, he's listening.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Wherever he is.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Millardair has continued charter flights for school groups, associations, etc., over the Toronto area and the Niagara Escarpment area for some four years now. It was a charter service that had originally been provided by Air Canada. These flights were made at the request of school boards and others on a charter basis, and were usually arranged by the teachers for their classes.

Due to the increase in annual insurance for such flying and the lack of volume, the company found the service uneconomical and decided to drop it this year. All who had booked such flights, including the Bruce Trail Association, were advised by registered letter of the cancellation of the service and the reason for it.

The company is prepared to try to reinstate the charter programme, provided it can be made economically viable, and is making efforts toward this end. I would say to the hon. member for Lakeshore that my ministry was in no way involved in this service, as it was purely between the individual groups and the charter company.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Doesn't the minister feel it is very convenient that at the time the people want to review what deprecations are being made in the Escarpment area, nobody is willing to fly over it? And is the minister prepared, then, to provide government aircraft at the cost price in order that groups such as the Bruce Trail Association may carry on their flights and have a direct look?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, to provide a government aircraft for such a service to the general public, or to any such group such as the Bruce Trail Association, would be in violation of our charter with the federal Air Transport Board. In other words, we have a charter only for the privilege of carrying our own staff members and members of government across the Province of Ontario and into other areas.

Mr. Reid: And their friends.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Being consistent with government duty.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would have to say to you again that this is purely a matter between the individual groups and the charter company. It's uneconomical then it would be pretty difficult to force a company to go into something that's just not paying.

Mr. Cassidy: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister then, in view of his involvement in providing some kind of air services, suggest what the public should do if they wish to find out what is happening in the Escarpment area by direct observation?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As I mentioned in my statement, Mr. Speaker, the company is trying to reinstate this service, and it is doing all in its power to make it economically viable. They're working to this end, and if they are successful, fine, it will be reinstated.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

POSTPONEMENT OF SEWER PROJECT

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question of the Minister of the Environment: Could the minister inform the House why the sewer project for the village of Wellesley has been postponed yet another year, because it has now been placed lower on priorities, when as far back as 1967 the Waterloo county health board pressured the municipality into starting to make plans for sewer services?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can't give the hon. member a detailed answer at the moment, but I'll get the information and give it to him tomorrow.

Mr. Good: Supplementary: When he is looking at the matter, could the minister review the priority position of this village, in light of the fact that they have already indicated that OHC is going to build 16 senior citizen housing units as soon as sewers are put in? Senior citizens have already sold their homes because of this, and generally speaking, the people are now going to be faced with higher costs because the ministry has delayed this yet another year. Engineering has been completed, so would the minister look into it, please, and get some action?

Mr. P. J. Yakubski (Renfrew South): Question, Mr. Speaker! Not statements.

Mr. Roy: Never mind, just keep quiet up there.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any further response? The hon. member for Sudbury.

GOVERNMENT AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Justice: Now that the Manitoba Public Insurance Corp. has demonstrated that it can effect a 15 per cent reduction in insurance premiums for automobiles, is there any conceivable reason why this government can't institute such a programme in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Mr. Speaker, I read the press report on the programme in Manitoba—Autopact, I believe it's called. As the hon. member knows, it's a relatively new programme. I think it should be given a little longer time to see if it really has achieved the benefits that the minister claims at the present time.

Mr. Renwick: We can get the minister more information if he wants.

Mr. MacDonald: The one in Saskatchewan has been there for 25 years.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As far as Ontario is concerned, we are continuously looking at ways to improve the automobile insurance field, including no-fault insurance and the general insurance field as well.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

ARBOUR DAY PLANTING ON LEGISLATIVE GROUNDS

Mr. Drea: I have a question of the Minister of Government Services. In the light of the decision of scores of schools and thousands of secondary school pupils to take part in Arbour Day festivities this year, will the minister consider compelling his staff to break with their prejudices and allow the planting of a native shrub for the first time on the legislative grounds?

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Urgent public importance.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I hadn't really thought of it. I didn't know there was any tradition to break, but I'll certainly give it consideration. I know on Friday, which is Arbour Day in Oakville, I myself am going to plant an oak tree in Oakville Park in the afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

PARKING OF MINISTRY CARS ON LEGISLATIVE SIDEWALKS

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Solicitor General. I wonder if the Solicitor General might assure the House that he will advise the OPP, who are in charge apparently of security around the premises here, to ticket or have towed away cars which are illegally parked on sidewalks impeding traffic and walking around? For the assistance of the minister, I might point out that today the following cars were illegally parked: car ONT 007, Ministry of Industry and Tourism; car ONT 019, Attorney General; and car ONT 001, Ministry of Transportation and Communications. Will he advise the OPP of this?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, not having arrived at the grounds until after 8 o'clock this morning, I don't know how early those cars were parked outside.

Mr. MacDonald: So far the minister's reply is irrelevant. Answer the question. We don't care what time the minister got here.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister have a log-book with the information?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I don't know whether the hon. member would do me the favour of covering all of the grounds. Have I his assurance that he covered all of the grounds?

Mr. Renwick: Every morning.

Mr. Lewis: Why does the minister not make a tour each morning? Why doesn't he delegate him?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He's nodding his head. Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether this comes within the jurisdiction of the OPP, but I shall be glad to look into the matter.

An hon. member: He should put his uniforms to work.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary: If I might advise the minister, if he will give me his salary I will do his job.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, this is the only part of my job the hon. member is fully capable of doing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I might advise that these cars were in the east entrance at noon today.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur. Order.

SCHOOL BUDGETS

Mr. Foulds: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Education. In view of the minister's response in the last few days, offering the Metro board a loan possibility of up to $8 million to meet its ceiling on spending, how does he find that consistent with the treatment his ministry gave to the Nipigon-Red Rock Board of Education in 1971, when he or his ministry levelled a fine on that board for exceeding its 1971 ceiling? That fine totalled $14,196. The ministry's phrase was "penalty." How does he find that consistent?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, they are of course two entirely different situations. The 1971 ceilings were set, and after reviewing the financial statements, those boards which had exceeded the ceilings were informed that there would be a fine levied. I think there has to be some indication that the ceilings are something that can't be tampered with easily; and this was the case with that board and eight or 10 other boards in this province.

Now as far as the Metro board and the offer made there, we are talking about something that's happening right now, a proposition that was put to us and our response to it; and really, the two instances don't relate. If the Nipigon-Red Rock board has any indication, or indicates to us it is having difficulty because of that levy, which will have to apply against its grants for this year, well then I would be happy to meet with it and talk to it about that.

Mr. Stokes: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware that his deputy has been in touch with the administrator of that particular board and asked them to hold off on the payment of the penalty until they can review the particular circumstances in the case? In view of the assurance by his deputy that it is being looked at, will the minister not now consider removing the penalty, for the very special reasons that they mentioned to his deputy—that is because of the hiring and payment of teachers, that the penalty would be forgiven?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well I can't assure the hon. member at this time that we will remove the penalty, but our consideration of this special situation will continue if it is found that it was justified—I shouldn't say justified, but that there were special circumstances of a very unusual nature that necessitated this happening—well then we will consider something in that regard.

Now this is particularly—and I want to emphasize this—for the boards of northern Ontario. I have said all along they have particular problems and should be considered individually and not considered with the rest. I have told the Hamilton board, for example, that there will be no special consideration for its penalty, imposed in that it has gone over the ceiling, because I think we have to make it clear that the ceilings are there to be adhered to and that they can't be frivolously ignored.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: Well, supplementary within the context of the minister's reply about boards and ceilings: Would he consider making a special grant to the board in which he and I are represented, in the borough of Scarborough, given their particular difficult situation of which he knows?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, Mr. Speaker, on that question I think really there's no answer possible at this time, because the ground rules which now apply are that grants be given to the Metropolitan Toronto school board; and given this ground rule, the money we give to the Metropolitan Toronto school board is then allocated according to its own equalization formula. As the hon. member knows, and I know I feel, there are inequities in the distribution formula within Metro, once they receive the money.

This is really what we have to get at, and that is why I suggested in my letter to the Metro board that we would appoint a commission to review the structure, organization and financing of the Metropolitan Toronto school board. I intend to announce within another couple of days the makeup of that commission so we can get to the root of this problem.

Mr. Speaker: One more supplementary; I think the hon. member has had a question or a supplementary on this topic.

Mr. Reid: No supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: No supplementaries; all right, the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to get back to the minister's original response. Could he be more clear about what the differences are? Is that difference simply the public pressure built up in the Metro press; and because the Metro board is a large and powerful board and the Red Rock board is a small board that just simply made the usual representations to the minister? What are those vast differences that he talks about?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The differences I am talking about, Mr. Speaker, are the different circumstances. We were talking here about boards that had exceeded the 1971 ceilings. The Metropolitan Toronto situation was a response to a situation which applies in Metropolitan Toronto concerning the 1973 ceilings and their ability to live within them:

But I think I have indicated we are willing to look in a particular way at the boards of northern Ontario and the hardships they may endure, which certainly aren't endured by other boards. If the Nipigon-Red Rock board, in their discussions with my ministry, can arrive at some conclusion that there were special difficulties, I think we can come to some mutually agreeable arrangements for them.

But as I say, inherent in all this is the basic premise that the ceilings are not there to be frivolously ignored. We have to stick by that premise and we intend to.

Mr. Foulds: The minister means you've got a better chance if you lobby ahead of time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peel South.

PRE-CLEARANCE OF CUSTOMS

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism regarding Malton international airport.

Mr. Cassidy: Can't the member speak to him outside?

Mr. Kennedy: Could he advise as to the pre-clearance at customs for passengers leaving Malton?

Mr. Martel: The answer must be all set up by now.

Mr. Kennedy: Is this being resolved? There was earlier discussion about it; is there anything to add? It is of great interest to Mississauga people.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, you will recall some days ago the Premier spoke on this particular subject. He indicated that we would communicate with Air Canada and the federal government to see exactly what position they were taking in regard to pre-clearance and post-clearance at the airport in Toronto.

May I say that I believe that this afternoon some time, as a result of my discussions today with Air Canada people and the federal government, there will be an announcement by Mr. Marchand, which I am sure will clear up the matter for all the people of the Province of Ontario and Canada relating to post-clearance and pre-clearance in this country. Until that statement is made I would not wish to make any further comment.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Revenue has the answer to a question previously asked.

Mr. Lewis: Now that's dangerous.

ELIZABETH GARDENS PROJECT

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, as a result of questions asked on March 30, I advised the Legislature that I would order an investigation into the complaints of occupants of the Elizabeth Gardens condominium town-house project in Windsor.

Many of the residents of this 112-unit project complained of deficiencies in the construction of their units and of their difficulties in getting the builder to correct them. I am advised that a thorough investigation has now been completed by OHC inspectors and the inspectors from the building department of the city of Windsor. All occupied units in this development were included in the investigation and OHC has prepared and presented to the builder a detailed, unit-by-unit list of deficiencies. The city of Windsor officials have also submitted a list. On April 13, 1973, the builder wrote as follows:

This is to advise you that we have received the list of infractions that the city of Windsor would like adjusted and also the infractions as set out by the Ontario Housing Corp. I have instructed Mr. Mann who is on the job that these infractions must be cleaned up by April 30, 1973.

Signed,

Yours very truly,
Essex Developments.

Mr. Speaker, as I advised the House on March 27, until such time as the noted deficiencies are cleared up to the satisfaction of OHC, a holdback in the amount of $345,000 will be maintained. OHC will continue to review the progress of this development until its satisfactory completion.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I believe the minister referred to the occupied houses. Were the unoccupied or incompleated houses not inspected also?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't have that information but I rather imagine, Mr. Speaker, that they would have examined all of the buildings. If the member wants that specific information I'll get it.

Mr. Deans: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the minister if, as a result of the inspections, he has drawn certain conclusions that can be incorporated into future proposals to buildings of Ontario Housing projects?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the hon. member is referring to or if he has anything specific. When people undertake to do a job, if they are undertaking to do something in which the OHC is involved, OHC has certain requirements, and OHC won't be satisfied unless those requirements are met. The requirements are those which one would expect. They must be of high standard—the quality, the building and everything else that must be done. If there is anything that arises from this investigation which would lead us to change our requirements in respect of financing these projects, of course, we will take that into consideration.

Mr. B. Newman: In light of the numerous complaints concerning the Elizabeth Gardens project, is the minister now satisfied that all of this will be completed and that the specifications in the original contract have been completely fulfilled? I am referring to some of the specifications in regard to the landscaping.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't think I can add to the statement that I have read, Mr. Speaker. There is a holdback, and unless Ontario Housing Corp. is satisfied, unless the city of Windsor is satisfied, that holdback will be maintained until they are satisfied.

Mr. B. Newman: Is the minister considering, as a result of the number of complaints, having a residential inspector from Ontario Housing to see in the future that such complaints would not be as numerous as they are in this instance?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't give such a guarantee; I would have to find out what the economics are of such a proposal. I don't know whether it's economical or even necessary to have a man on duty all the time. If it is deemed necessary in any particular instance we will do it.

But by and large, I think the hon. member will agree that the work that has been done for OHC over the years is of a very high standard. Indeed there is considerable opinion that it is of a higher standard than private developments in many instances.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park; a new question.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Solicitor General: Can the Solicitor General explain why he would take a government airplane to St. Catharines when there is no time saving, but an increased expenditure of some hundreds of dollars?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should take a look at the map of Ontario and he would realize that on the direct flight from the Toronto Island Airport to St. Catharines, there is a considerable saving of time.

Mr. Shulman: Is the minister not aware that the Toronto Island Airport informed me that the flight time is 20 minutes; the time taken to get to the airport is another 20 minutes and the time taken at the other end is 20 minutes. The total saving is 15 minutes. Does he really think his fifteen minutes are worth $300? In other words, is he worth $1,200 an hour?

Mr. Yakabuski: Was the member worth $67,000 last year?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to argue the fact that it takes just as long to get from here to the Island Airport as it takes to get from here to that point of the Queen Elizabeth Way, the Lakeshore highway, that would take one out to the Island Airport. On the other hand, Mr. Airport—Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: This subject bothers those fellows!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It doesn't bother me.

Mr. Lewis: The Solicitor General never has his feet on the ground anyway, so it doesn't matter.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I would say to that Charlie McCarthy sitting in the NDP leader's seat—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He is Charlie McCarthy today.

Mr. Lewis: That is a nice compliment.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Charlie McCarthy. The voice was that of Esau in the back.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: A brilliant piece of repartee!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: But I will say this for the hon. leader of the NDP, he didn't ask—

Mr. Lewis: The minister is not answering me. He is being provocative. Sit down.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He has changed the kind of question. He is not as insulting as the member for High Park is.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: We are going to learn about that.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the Solicitor General know the punch line in the Charlie McCarthy exchanges? "How can you be so stupid?" And that is his position over there on this issue.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Cassidy: He is really losing the track there. He knows he is really having trouble.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member doesn't realize is that I had made a commitment to be in St. Catharines and had to be in Windsor at the same—

Mr. Lewis: This isn't a flight to Cuba. This is just to St. Catharines. It doesn't take an hour and a half to explain.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That's right. Why doesn't the leader of the NDP tell that to the hon. member for High Park?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! This is a waste of the question period. Other members are waiting.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Keep it going.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I flew on to Windsor from St. Catharines.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier says of the Solicitor General what Henry II said of Becket: "Will no one rid me of this man?"

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Three premiers, four leaders of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The time has actually elapsed, but one hon. member has been trying desperately to get the floor, and in view of the unnecessary delay I am going to permit the question of the other hon. member. The hon. member for Rainy River.

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Reid: I have a question of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister's department been involved in the negotiations between the construction labourers' union and the construction companies because of the possibility of a strike within a week's time if this contract is not arrived at?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would think that through our construction industry review panel, which of course is getting in touch with all the construction industry, I can assure members we are presently keeping in constant touch to see what is going to happen next month when the contracts are up.

Mr. Speaker: The question period has now elapsed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did you say collapsed?

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. Ewen, from the standing private bills committee, in the absence of Mr. Taylor, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr20, An Act respecting Hobin Homes Ltd.;

Bill Pr28, An Act respecting the city of Barrie;

Bill Pr33, An Act respecting S. B. Young Ltd.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill Pr26, An Act respecting the city of Windsor;

Bill Pr38, An Act respecting the city of Ottawa.

Your committee recommends that Bill Pr29, An Act respecting the town of Vaughan, be not reported.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I am not sure what point I should rise on here, but it was understood specifically in the committee that amendments to the bill respecting the city of Ottawa, Pr38, would not come forward to this House until it had been checked with the city of Ottawa legal people; and I also had an assurance that I, as a member for the area concerned, would have a look at that before it came forward to the House.

I'm not even sure who is responsible for this, I suppose it is the chairman of the committee. I would ask that Bill Pr38 not be reported at this time to the House, if that is possible; or is there some other procedure?

Mr. Speaker: I am informed that this particular bill, if it is reported as included in the report, may be held on the order paper for second reading. So I think probably the best procedure would be to adopt the report, and then deal with your interests on second reading.

Mr. Cassidy: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. As long as I would have assurance from the government it would not go forward at this time.

Hon. Mr. McNie presented the 1971-1972 annual report of the Ontario Educational Communications Authority.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that the estimates of expenditures for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, of the ministries named be referred to standing committees as follows:

The Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to the administration of justice committee;

The Ministry of the Environment, Management Board, Speaker, Provincial Auditor to the estimates committee;

The Ministries of Industry and Tourism, Natural Resources, and Transportation and Communications to the resources development committee.

The Ministries of Colleges and Universities, Community and Social Services, and Health to the social development committee.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, can I ask a question for clarification of this? I was under the impression that we were going to move from policy field to policy field. We're now in the Justice field and, indeed, I was rather curious to find out to which field we were going after that. Since we have a mix of ministries from at least two fields, the Resources field and—

Mr. Lewis: Social Development field.

Mr. MacDonald: —Social Development field, is the House leader going to be mixing them from this point forward?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): I wouldn't say necessarily so. I think we can agree upon that after the provincial secretaries make their introductions of their fields in the House. We'll do it as is most convenient to the committees concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me clarify this then, by way of illustration. If we next move, for example, to the Resources field and that group of estimates is, in effect, introduced by the Provincial Secretary who is responsible for that area, will we then complete all of that, or is the minister going to intervene before it is completed and have the Provincial Secretary for Social Development move in and have a mix of both of them?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No. I think I know what is concerning the hon. member. I would say to him that we'll endeavour to get both provincial secretaries' statements in the House and function in such a way that the appropriate standing committee of one field might sit while another field might possibly be heard in the House.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a comment or question on the motion, we will never have more than one ministry in the House and one out of the House simultaneously?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That was the basic meaning of my response.

Mr. Stokes: And never the same policy field meeting concurrently?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That is exactly correct.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Hardly ever.

Mr. Deans: Except when he does it.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Can I have the unanimous consent of the House to revert to reports? There is one report that was missed.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Snow presented the annual report of the Ministry of Labour for the year 1971-1972.

Mr. Stokes: Has the minister got the log-books there?

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

ONTARIO PLACE CORP. ACT, 1972

Hon. Mr. Bennett moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Ontario Place Corp. Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Martel: Is the minister going to sell it?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Send it up to Sudbury.

Mr. Martel: Put it in Happy Valley.

An hon. member: He would soon change the name if he did.

Mr. Lewis: He wouldn't put a hovel like that beside the member for Sudbury East's new home.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the amendment removes the authority of the corporation to employ, and govern the terms of employment of its own staff, and provides for the appointment of a staff under the Public Service Act.

SHORELINE PROPERTY ASSISTANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide Assistance for the Rehabilitation and Protection of Property on or Adjacent to Shorelines.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is not so independent after all, eh?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this is the bill which I described in my statement before the question period and I think that probably explained it well enough.

CONSUMER REPORTING ACT

Hon. Mr. Clement moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to control the Storage and Supply of Personal Information for Rating Purposes.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, I have no further comments to make at this time in spite of the regret expressed by the member from Downsview.

CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Burr moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Consumer Protection Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, the bill removes the practice of calculating the cost of borrowing on the previous monthly balance in a variable credit transaction. The average daily balance is to be used instead. In this way a purchaser will pay interest only on the amount he owes and not on amounts that he may have paid off two or three weeks before.

Mr. Bullbrook: That bill has been long needed. That's a very good piece of legislation.

Mr. Burr: Thank you.

BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

Mr. Roy moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I must say that when the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations introduced his bill I was disappointed to see that the item covered in the bill I have just presented was not covered.

This bill actually was presented last year and deals with the question of fingerprinting individuals so they may have the right to shop in certain stores. Although one cannot stop people from giving their fingerprints, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is first of all to require notice by the stores to the people that they will be fingerprinted, and that the only time they can be fingerprinted will be on payment by way of cheque and when there is no other form of identification, and to limit the use of fingerprints taken from individuals.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READING

Clerk of the House: The first order, third reading of Bill 93, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Has the minister (Mr. Carton) abandoned the bill? He should have.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: He made a big mistake when he brought that bill in.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a few comments on the bill. I've had the opportunity since Tuesday to reflect on a number of statements made by the minister, and I think that it's worth bringing them to his attention again, and also to the attention of the House in general.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): But without repetition.

Mr. Cassidy: As the House will recall, what this bill does is to give the minister authority to commit the province to a system in which he may well spend $1.3 billion on transit systems around the province. The authority for that entire sum is not contained in this bill. However, the commitment to a technology is contained in this bill, because as the minister has explained he is going to tie up the rights no matter what systems are planned in Toronto, Ottawa and Hamilton and other cities, and ultimately they will be built.

Mr. Speaker, we have raised questions about this bill, because frankly we are a bit concerned about the technological aspect; and we are even more concerned about the systems aspect of what the minister is getting into.

We are far from convinced that, for all of his reputation, the minister really knows what on earth he is doing. That suspicion or that uneasiness we have is added to by the manner in which he replied during the course of the debate on Tuesday afternoon and Tuesday night.

The minister told us that for the past four years the Province of Ontario has had studies of this project underway and that he himself has gone around to see some of the contenders; there have been evaluations and so on.

Well, here we are—and if I can just go back and quote the minister from Tuesday:

It didn't just happen within the past year or two. There was research made of all the various components. The components have been tested.

And then he went on to talk about his own experts and how good they were; about how he had independent transportation consultants come in and support him in what he was intending to do; and that when he was out visiting and talking to people in Britain that everybody told him what first-rate chaps he had working for him.

Well, the minister, I'm afraid, is rather vain—he succumbs to this kind of flattery. Because, quite frankly, I'm not convinced now that he knows a darn thing about the project, apart from what the experts have told him. I don't think he is asking the right questions, and that is why I think that he may well be making a grievous mistake as far as this province is concerned.

It is a mistake which is liable to cost this province not just $15 million or $20 million for a demonstration project down at the National Exhibition, but far, far more than that. It will create a distortion of priorities and a mispending of public money. This, in turn, will hurt efforts to improve the environment in our major cities in the province.

The minister was really quite hurt, Mr. Speaker, that I would get up and talk about technology and raise questions about that. He said: "But to criticize the technology is beyond my comprehension."

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the technology itself is beyond the minister's comprehension, and that in addition the kind of basic parameters which surround the system have not come under the right kind of critical scrutiny.

That was the major reason we said that the bill should be opposed, that there should be at least a couple of months' hoist while some of the basic underlying assumptions which went into this system would be considered. It's my conviction that they never have been, because the minister certainly hasn't answered very satisfactorily.

In order to demonstrate to this House that he was competent to judge what was being done, the minister went through an elaborate exercise to show that he had memorized the definition for telecommunications something about which he had admitted he has very little knowledge. I am sure that he can also define for this House intermediate-capacity rapid transit; something about which he also has very little knowledge.

Mr. Speaker, the problem the minister is putting before us, quite bluntly, is that in common with other jurisdictions in North America, he has become enthralled in looking at these personalized rapid transit systems. He has become convinced by his people that they can meet all of the requirements that exist in a city like Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Singer: He has to find something for the Premier (Mr. Davis) to put his hat on. He knows that.

Mr. Cassidy: In other words, the systems designed to carry maybe 2,000 or 3,000 per hour, will also carry up to 20,000 people per hour. Without going into all of the details, I would suggest that the costs, the additional costs, of personalized rapid transit bear very close consideration. I would suggest the technology and the technological risks bear very close consideration. I would suggest that the goals of the ministry, of allowing people to get onto a little car and then go through a network almost anywhere within the city of Toronto, simply cannot be reached except under certain very special circumstances, and those circumstances are as follows.

If the minister's system is ever completed, it will be possible, from three o'clock to four o'clock in the morning, to get on one of these cars anywhere in the city, to press a button and be taken to any other point along the network, along any line. But I would seriously suggest to the minister that the social utility of that kind of service, in the wee small hours of the morning, when there are so few people on board that personalized rapid transit in the ultimate sense can be provided, is really not worth the kinds of expenditures which are being entailed.

Mr. Speaker, the kinds of expenditures which are being entailed are in the range of $15 million-a-mile, and when that kind of money is being spent then the pipe dreams of the technological planners for intermediate-capacity systems within walking distance of every home in the city simply cannot be achieved. You just can't do it because you haven't got the bucks; you haven't got the bucks to provide that kind of expressway system service; and you haven't got the dollars to provide that kind of intermediate-capacity service.

It will never be done. It's a chimera which the minister has been convinced to follow by his advisers; and he is a prisoner, he is a captive of these advisers; and this is why the whole question needs to be brought out in the open rather than being left in the current unsatisfactory kind of situation, where after four years the minister will begin to tell us something about what is involved in the system, when he has signed the contract that commits the province to $15 million or $20 million at the exhibition grounds, and which also effectively commits the province to using that technology in an intermediate-capacity system for Toronto, Ottawa and for Hamilton. You know, Mr. Speaker, there are some sceptics in my party who believe and are firmly convinced that once the little toy line—and it is a toy line in fact, the minister himself admitted it; capacity 3,000 or 4,000 people per hour, nor more than that. The minirail up at Expo, which was built for a tenth of that price—

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): It is not 3,000 or 4,000 an hour, and I never admitted that. It is up to 20,000 per hour.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the figures which are given in the red book of specifications for the line down at the Exhibition indicate very specifically that the initial capacity will be—I can't remember the precise figures, I have it here, let me find it. The initial capacity, Mr. Mr. Speaker, will be to accommodate peak loads of 1,300 people per hour; that is the actual number they expect to accommodate.

They want the capacity of the line down at the exhibition to rise to 4,000 people per hour, and that is all.

Now I grant to the minister that the system ought to have the capability of rising up to 20,000 per hour, but in fact the specifications, in this red book again, do not insist on that. They demand a maximum of 12,000 people per hour at 80 per cent of the theoretical capacity.

Now I am raising these questions and we will continue to raise these questions.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question. When we were debating this the other day, in answer to exactly what he just put forward again today, I asked him was it not because we were just buying a certain number of cars, because it was a demonstration project, and he admitted it. That is why; we are having a fewer number of cars because it is a demonstration project. That is why the carrying capacity is limited, and he admitted that. But now he is bringing out the same thing again, which is not proper.

Mr. Cassidy: But Mr. Speaker, the—

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Much of what has been said so far, of course, has been said previously in the committee stage, and at second reading, approval of the bill in principle. This, of course, is third reading. I have permitted the hon. member to continue and make some remarks on third reading, but I should point out to the hon. member and to the House that, in connection with third readings the ruling of previous Speakers in this House make it very clear that debate on third reading is a very limited and carefully restricted one.

I do not say there cannot be any debate on third reading. The bill has been approved in principle at second reading and has been considered by the committee of the whole House. I was listening very carefully over the speaker system to the debate in committee, and I do know that some of what the hon. member has said is repetitious; but it wasn't too far astray, so I permitted him to continue.

Third reading debate is very closely restricted in most provinces today, and the restriction tends to increase as to debate on third reading. For example, in the House of Commons in the United Kingdom it is now required that at least six members give notice of a desire to have a debate on third reading before any such debate can be held at all.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): That's just an effort to exclude the UK Liberals, that's all.

Mr. Speaker: Having made these few remarks to the hon. members, I would ask the hon. member for Ottawa Centre to confine his remarks and wind up this debate on third reading. We are not trying to be too restrictive, I don't think, and perhaps he would go along with the suggestions I have made.

Mr. Cassidy: I am always anxious to heed your admonitions, Mr. Speaker. I would point out to you that the last few minutes were in fact provoked by the minister and not by myself; he insisted on getting into that level of detail, which of course was repetitive and should not have come up at this time. I would suggest that you should rebuke the minister rather than myself for that particular thing.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I hereby rebuke the minister too.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I stand rebuked.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): He sits rebuked.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, my comments flow from consideration of what the minister had to say. I had a chance to look at the instant Hansard and to study his statements; I thought on reflection that perhaps the minister could have persuaded me and our party, but he has not. He is buying something or making a major commitment, and we are convinced he is rushing into it and has not allowed himself to benefit from some of the rather sensible observations being made by the opposition parties and which might be made by the public, were they to be brought into his confidence—but they are not being brought into his confidence.

He is in the position of closeting himself with people who are paid by him and who therefore, in order to continue their salaries, just might want to continue to tell him what he wants to hear. He is in a position where many transit experts in other cities, and particularly in the United States, have become intrigued by the kind of technical problems and technical solutions which the intermediate-capacity rapid transit field offers.

In the United States it appears they are working on budgets which are virtually without limit. The budget for rapid transit for the City of Washington, for example, is something like $2.5 billion; that's for a city somewhat comparable in size to Metro Toronto. We are not quite that affluent in this country, and I would suggest to the minister that we should protect public dollars if we can; we shouldn't just throw them away because the minister feels he will be immortalized by this legacy to the province.

The minister might want to comment in a few minutes, but I have not heard from him or had any information come across my desk about the study with the TTC of light rapid transit, which he informed the House had been made. During the debate he was not able to say when or how that study had been made; of all the alternatives, that is the one which probably required the most serious consideration, and that was not done.

I don't want to engage the minister in a lot of things, because we will do that in the estimates, but the House should bear in mind that when we come to the estimates this matter will be after the fact unless this minister decides to delay this bill in order to look at some of the questions which have been raised in the House.

Mr. Speaker, in the computer industry there is a saying, "Garbage in, garbage out." That means that we get wrong answers if we start with wrong assumptions or wrong information. I am not disputing the calibre of the technical experts who have been brought in on this; they probably are pretty good. I am not disputing that they haven't worked long and hard. I am not disputing that each one in his field knows an awful lot about computerized controls, automated signalling, or whatever it is they happen to be looking into.

What we are saying, though, is that the overall picture has not been adequately examined; it is at that level that the mistakes have been made, that wrong assumptions either have been made or may well have been made, and therefore wrong answers are liable to come out. We are going to oppose this bill on third reading, Mr. Speaker, and we would hope very sincerely that the minister will heed what has been said in this House and will hold over his signing of the contract until there has been an opportunity to look in detail at some of the very disturbing questions that already surround the intermediate-capacity rapid transit project.

If the minister actually succeeds in getting the line in running for the 1975 election, and if by some bad fortune for the province his government is re-elected, is it true, as some members of my party suspect, that that will be the end of intermediate-capacity rapid transit for the province?

Mr. Lewis: Of course! Except if you live at the exhibition year round.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. Is it true that the costs of the system by then will look so high in relation to the benefits that the minister will simply say: "Well, that was tough, but it was nice trying;" and will go back either to leaving the cities to rot the way they're going now or building subway lines? What are the minister's intentions?

Mr. Speaker: This sort of debate is apart from whether or not the bill should now receive third reading.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the minister has answered none of the questions raised in the debate very satisfactorily. We are going to oppose the bill, despite the fact that we endorse very heartily the principle of a very substantial shift in resources to rapid transit from expressways, which the ministers and his predecessors have built for so many years. We endorse the shift from arterial roads, for that matter, too. We endorse the concept of rapid transit. We believe this should be going forward. We think that in Toronto the TTC probably has a lot more sensible ideas than the minister about it. Their advice should be heeded rather than ignored in the planning process which has taken place in the ministry. But with all that endorsement of rapid transit, Mr. Speaker, we cannot bring ourselves to allow the minister to climax four years of work in camera by signing for a pig in a poke, or a possible pig in a poke.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, we in this party, as I think most politicians in the House, endorse as strongly as we can the principle of public rapid transit as an alternative to the madness that envelops us. But I may say to the minister that this bill mutilates the phrase "public transit", just as this government seems to be willing to do in other areas. I recall that they destroyed the meaning of the phrase "regional government." I note that they are undermining the meaning of the phrase "tax credit." With this bill they are significantly depreciating the worth of the phrase "rapid public transit," because they are hanging their hat almost solely on an experiment which they know and we know is perilous at best.

The minister does it and the government does it without giving us, in advance, any idea of the cost, knowing that its timing is perfectly propitious, whether it was calculated or not, to mesh with a general election in 1975, after which it can then be happily abandoned at a cost—reckless indeed—of $20 million or more.

We can't allow that to be done to public transit in this province because the government will disown it. We will be reduced to the old forms or to forms which won't work. So we're opposing this bill and we are dividing the House. We want the minister to know that we feel deeply about what he has introduced and we object to it in principle.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, lest there be any doubt about our position, which we thought we'd enunciated quite clearly, we'll just very briefly repeat it. We do not believe there is any point in having this bill here. We do not believe in this experimentation at some substantial cost. The government is continuing to fiddle while Metro burns, while traffic gets piled up throughout the northwest sector of Metro, while no alternatives are being provided—

Mr. Cassidy: Let it go on the record that the member does not believe in public transit.

Mr. Singer: —and while this minister with a straight face can stand up in the House today and make a great commitment to extend the Don Valley Parkway without taking care of the problems that now exist. Mr. Speaker, this bill really is a mistake, as has been the government's whole transportation policy. We shall, as we made quite clear on second reading and in committee, oppose this bill. We think the minister is stuck with a plan thrown out by his leader, who got caught up in political propaganda two years ago in June. He was creating an image and now he has to try to bring forth some alternative. First came the image; now comes the alternative.

The alternative is a farce. Why should the minister waste $20 million of public money? There is no answer. There is no excuse. The bill should not pass. The minister should not be given the approval he asks for.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): It's a blank cheque for a white elephant.

Mr. Speaker: Do any other members wish to participate? If not, has the minister any comments?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker.

First of all, I appreciate the concern of the opposition. Frankly, I think that when one enters into an experiment of this magnitude everyone has concern, and the concern has been there for three or four years. It has progressed through that length of time and we have now come down to the point at which we sincerely believe that we are in a position where we can have this demonstration project.

Again, I do want to point out, I appreciate very much the concern of the opposition on this. I, personally, had my concerns at one time.

First of all, as far as the power that may be given to me today is concerned, as I pointed out originally, I presently have the power. The only reason this bill is before the House is to get additional powers to garner in the patent rights and the expertise and the technology so that we will not have to purchase these at the conclusion of the demonstration project.

I might also mention, Mr. Speaker, that apart from the expertise in the ministry and the hired consultants, and all the other people I mentioned earlier, the TTC has been very much a part of this. We have the endorsement of those at the TTC who are, within our knowledge, the experts on rapid transit, those who have the knowhow themselves. They are keenly interested and are looking forward to this particular project of the provincial government.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Carton: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to finish—I don't mind accepting—

Mr. Cassidy: Why did one of the TTC technical people get thrown out of that project because he didn't agree with it? Why was he taken off the minister's team? Because he didn't agree with it; he was so upset.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, all I can say, again, is we have had the expertise of the TTC.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister waited until he got the yes-men to come in.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Carton: From the very top level down, Mr. Speaker! Again, I point out that we are giving the ministry the enabling legislation. There are $7 million in our estimates for this current 1973-1974 fiscal year, at which time the members of the opposition will have time and will be—

Mr. Cassidy: It is like buying a Cadillac with $10 down!

Hon. Mr. Carton: —questioning the minister and his officials on this particular project.

Mr. Cassidy: Do members want to do that?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, again I point out that we are in the position where I cannot, as I explained to the House, go into the detail of negotiations which are presently being carried on because of the very fact that the contracts are almost at the signing point. I would not want to divulge anything that might in any way hinder the negotiations that have been ongoing for some six or seven months now in the contract stage.

All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that this is enabling legislation which we do require for the signing of these contracts. It is not $1.25 billion that we are talking about today; it is $7 million in our estimates for the year 1973-1974.

Mr. Singer: Notwithstanding what the minister puts in his estimates, how much is this one going to cost us? He won't tell us.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for third reading of Bill 93.

The House divided on the motion for third reading of Bill 93, which was approved on the following vote:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried. Motion agreed to; third reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 16th order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 96, An Act to amend The Income Tax Act.

INCOME TAX ACT

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I was speaking on this bill at the time the debate was adjourned and I had made a point to the parliamentary assistant about the unfairness of choosing the highest paid wage-earner for these refunds if a husband and wife are living together and if they are both working. I have here some correspondence that was forwarded to me by a lady who finds herself in this position. She shows me this tax credit notice, and some of the instructions that are contained therein I think should be of some interest, I think Mr. Speaker, to the parliamentary assistant.

Under the heading: "Should the Husband or Wife Claim?" The printed explanation is where the husband and wife both live in the same principal residence, the one with the higher taxable income must claim; and if the higher taxable income is such that it removes the husband from the position of being able to gain a refund, then no matter what the wife is earning she loses it.

"Where taxation incomes are equal or where neither has a taxable income, either spouse may claim, but not both." Well, all right, that's fine. That doesn't seem to be changed by what is before us in the House.

But then read the other set of instructions under the heading, "What Do I Do If I Share a Residence?"

Two or more unmarried people who rent or own the same principal residence have two choices: They can designate one person as the principal taxpayer to claim the entire credit, or they can all claim as principal taxpayers and divide the tax bill or rent in whatever fashion they wish. The collective total of rents or property taxes claimed must not exceed the actual rent or taxes paid. In addition [and this is important] each person should show the combined claim and list the names and addresses of the other payers on the reverse side of the mauve claim form.

What this in fact means, Mr. Speaker, is that where you have a husband and wife who are both working, and the husband has the higher income, his income is the one that governs. If his income is high enough that he is not entitled to the tax credit, then it is lost. But, if you have two people who are not married, either renting or living in the same house, the rules are entirely different.

Let me tell you what this lady tried to do. She wrote to the Ontario Human Rights Commission. I think this is sufficiently unfair that it should all be in the record.

Ontario Human Rights Commission.

Dear Sir or Mesdames:

For the past few weeks I have been—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): That sounded like John Diefenbaker!

Hon. J. White (Treasurer, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): That's the funniest thing he has said here in 14 years.

Mr. Singer: To continue:

I have been very much aware that I possess certain rights under the Ontario Human Rights Code, and that if these rights are denied me the Ontario Human Rights Commission stands ready to serve me. I therefore wish to register a complaint as follows.

It is my firm contention that discrimination is being displayed against me, because of my marital status, by the Crown in the right of Ontario. I base my contention on the Ontario Human Rights Code, part 1, section 1, sub 1, which prohibits the publishing of discriminatory material against any person because of marital status by amendment which received royal assent June 30, 1972; and section 6 of part 1 which binds the Crown in the right of Ontario to these prohibitions.

You can tell, Mr. Speaker, from the tone of the letter that the lady who wrote it had a little experience in a law office. In fact, she is a secretary to a very prominent lawyer who practises law here in the Province of Ontario.

As evidence that the Crown in the right of Ontario has indeed published matter indicating discrimination against me on the basis of my marital status, I quote from a copy of the Ontario tax credit notice left at my door recently and which copy I am keeping in my possession for future reference.

"Where the husband and wife both live in the same principal residence, the one with the higher taxable income must claim. 2. Two or more unmarried people who rent or own the same principal residence have two choices, they can all claim as principal taxpayers and divide the tax bill in whatever fashion they wish."

I am a married woman and hold the property in joint tenancy. My husband and I both work and are classed as single persons for taxation purposes. Were I unmarried, I could claim the property tax rebate. Since I am married and my husband earns considerably more than I do, both of us are denied any tax relief from property taxes.

This is outright discrimination and is particularly annoying since we have an 18-year-old son to provide accommodation for. Were we to get a divorce and then live together in a common-law relationship, we would be free to claim the tax rebate. It would appear that the government of Ontario does not favour marriage and has published its antipathy toward marriage and married people in the beforementioned Ontario tax credit notice.

I therefore request that you take whatever steps are necessary to investigate this matter and redress my grievance. This letter is not written in the spirit of frivolity and I shall be satisfied with nothing less than a judicial decision to the effect that the Crown in the right of Ontario is not contravening a statute which the Crown itself enacted; or alternatively some satisfactory redress of my grievance.

I am firmly convinced that if the government of Ontario is sincere in its praiseworthy aim to rid the province of discrimination, it should be prepared to clean its own house first and to be willing to submit to prosecution if necessary. [I think this makes great sense.] If my complaint has not been submitted in the form prescribed by the commission, perhaps you will be kind enough to provide a precedent.

Yours very truly

I can give the parliamentary assistant the lady's name and address if he wants it. I have it here.

I thought it was also worth commenting upon the reply that came up from the Human Rights Commission. It's signed by Elizabeth Neville who is the director.

Dear Mrs. Blank,

I have now had an opportunity to consult with our legal adviser on the matter of your complaint about the provisions of the Ontario tax credit notice which you consider discrimination on the basis of marital status and allege that this was a violation of the Ontario Human Rights Code, part 1, section 1, subsection 1.

As I indicated to you over the telephone, we have to advise you that the above-noted section of the Code does not cover the explanatory guide to which you have referred. I am advised that the term "notice" and "other representations" in section 1, subsection 1 could only be extended to similar types of signs, symbols, emblems, etc., as specifically referred to in the section. [Perish the thought that it should extend to any official notice sent out by the Ministry of Revenue of the Province of Ontario]

However, [Elizabeth Neville goes on to say] I would suggest that you write to the director of taxation and fiscal policy branch of the Ministry of the Treasury and Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, who is responsible for administration of the property tax rebate system with respect to your concern that the tax is unfairly applied in the case of spouses who contribute to the rent of their shared principal residence.

I can assure you that we will also be seeking discussion with the taxation branch.

Yours very truly—

That's where it rests. There is a covering letter to me and the lady sets out reasons why she would like to have the redress that she claims, and I think it's quite logical.

I wonder if the minister will tell us, as he pilots this bill through the House, why this kind of unfair and unreasonable discrimination must continue to exist and is espoused in the notices that the ministry sends out? Is the government of Ontario really against married couples living together in the same house or would it recommend that they get a divorce and live common law so that they can take advantage of the beneficence bestowed upon them by the government of Ontario?

Mr. Bullbrook: Is the parliamentary assistant against marriage?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Does any other hon. member wish to speak to this bill? If not, the parliamentary assistant may reply.

Mr. G. W. Walker (London North): Mr. Speaker, I'll try to review some of the questions posed last Tuesday evening by the members and attempt to provide the answers as best I can.

The member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) raised a question about the mathematical formula. He is not present right now, but perhaps the formula will interest others. The new section 3(8) of the Income Tax Act—or the formula in section (8) before you—is that the provincial refund equals the federal refund times—and then there is an equation. The equation allows for 30.5 per cent times 39 per cent on the top line and 40 per cent on the bottom line. That's basically what all those words say.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): They say 30.5 times 39 over 40?

Mr. Walker: Right.

Mr. Lewis: That is clear.

Mr. Bullbrook: Has the member got that locked in?

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Explain that to me.

Mr. Lewis: After this is over.

Mr. Walker: The equation for subsection (9) allows for the capital gains refund to equal the equation, which is the Ontario income over top of the world income.

Mr. Singer: The world income? Is that the whole world?

Mr. Walker: The whole world.

Mr. Singer: Behind the iron curtain, too?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Do we have a claim on that?

Mr. Walker: Oh, yes!

Mr. Speaker, the matter of mutual fund provisions and its paralleling of the federal legislation was raised by the member for Riverdale and he queried it. The answer is that the purpose is to parallel the federal provision in the Income Tax Act, Canada, so that all the capital gains tax paid by the mutual fund trust to both Canada and Ontario may be recovered by the trust. The legislation was requested by Canada. The language is of their making and the purpose is to provide uniformity throughout the Canadian provinces vis-à-vis legislation.

The member for Riverdale went on and inquired about the revenue effect. There is a minimal effect. In fact, on a 40 per cent personal tax rate, which I think is a taxable income of around $25,000, the province would pick up a few pennies on a personal capital gain approaching $100. The federal government is holding back the moneys waiting for our legislation, so that it can effect the appropriate refund.

The member for Riverdale raised the question about the property tax credit and wanted to know why the tax credit should be applied by the Treasurer of this province to pay taxes outstanding in other provinces and to pay taxes involving the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

The reason is that the terms of the collection agreement entered into between Ottawa and Ontario require the provision. It is called the tax rental agreement and it dates back to 1962. The amendments regarding the property tax credit system date back to 1972.

If we want to have the federal government collect our income taxes, then we are obliged generally to play by their own rules, and their rules require that we eliminate as much complexity as possible. In fact, the more complex the less they are prepared to participate. They have offered us the alternative of setting up our own collection agency. I think the hon. members here will agree that that would be inappropriate, keeping in mind the number of district taxation offices we would need throughout the province.

In addition, the federal government has powers within its Act to seize by means of the third party demands. These are in the Unemployment Insurance Committee Act and in the Canada Pension Act and every other Act, so that they have total recourse. For all these reasons, we can hardly now attempt to change the rules.

The hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Good) raised certain questions involving the arrears of municipal taxes. He felt that the municipality should be the recipient of any of the tax credits which may be distributed by the Treasurer rather than the federal government. In this particular case, while not attempting to shift the responsibility, it must be kept in mind that the municipalities do have their own machinery for collecting back taxes, property taxes, namely, by the tax sale.

In addition to that, the reasons given to the member for Riverdale would similarly apply, that we are stuck with the tax rental agreement, and those are the terms. The terms are such that if we were to attempt to change them, we would be obliged, ultimately, to enter into our own collection agency, and of course to avoid the complexity.

The member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) raised the matter of foreign diplomats, and more particularly the question of foreign professors. He refers to the visiting professors who are on what is called a two-year tax holiday. One distinction we could make initially is that the foreign professors usually rent their own home and included in that rent is the payment of taxes.

Now a foreign diplomat usually has his home provided by the federal government, or by the government of his own country, and he is not obliged to pay taxes because of the exemption of section 149.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Oh, the teachers are getting a ride and the member knows it.

Mr. Walker: Now, my answer—

Mr. Martel: They are ripping off the system.

Mr. Walker: —to the member for Kitchener is basically that I agree with the sentiments that he's expressed. But at the present time, the select committee on economic and cultural nationalism is seized of the problem. It is going to report on this very question, and discussed the very matter yesterday, and presumably will come forward within a month or so with a report that will relate to this very question.

Mr. Martel: They've met their Waterloo.

Mr. Walker: In view of the fact that the 1972 question of taxes is not an issue—it's too late to do anything there—and in view of the fact that we have some time in the fall, if the select committee does make a recommendation in respect of the foreign professors and their collection of the tax credit, then at least we'd be in a position to consider it for legislation possibly in the fall.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Does the member want to bet the government will move that quickly?

Mr. Walker: It would be premature at this time to make any type of amendment which would alter it, in my opinion.

The member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) raised the matter of the so-called advantage in calculating the occupancy costs for those who have such utilities as heat, hydro, water, cable television and such other benefits as swimming pools, garages and so forth, already included in their rent. This does inflate the occupancy cost by some 20 per cent of their determined value. The municipal subsidies branch, however, advise that the benefit is marginal—somewhat slight.

As an example, where $300 represents the overall utility cost for a year, something over and above what might be termed "pure rent," the tax credit would be $6 higher.

Now, it would be far too much of a burden for the taxpayer to attempt to segregate this on his own income tax return, and in respect of the province the inconvenience caused and the machinery required to correct the situation would far outweigh the marginal benefits which are going out to certain people. So there is a bit of a benefit to people, but under the circumstances I feel it is warranted, considering the complexity question again.

The question raised by the member for Downsview relates to the potential discrimination between married couples and people who are living together without benefit of clergy.

Mr. Singer: No, I didn't limit it to that; I just said any two. It was one lady's suggestion that she would be better off financially if she divorced her husband and lived with him common law.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): So would mine!

Mr. Walker: I might volunteer my own practice for the divorce.

Mr. Lewis: Without benefit of clergy? That is a little risqué for southwestern Ontario, isn't it?

Mr. Walker: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: I don't know about that.

Mr. Lewis: Well, for parts of southwestern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The way the leader of the NDP sneers about southwestern Ontario is the reason his party doesn't do very well down there.

Mr. Lewis: Well naturally, we actually run the clergy down there.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member could kid me.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, it is correct that in the case of married couples, the spouse with the higher taxable income is eligible to claim the property tax credit. In the case of unmarried couples, each member is considered a principal taxpayer and eligible for the credit.

The federal government, in its reform of the income tax structure did not choose to follow the family unit basis—and this is the Carter definition of taxation—partly because of the administrative difficulties of such a system.

As the income tax system now exists, an individual with the same taxable income as the sum of taxable incomes of two adults in the same household, in most cases pays more income tax than do the two adults in the same household. Should a move be made by the federal government to the family unit basis, the Carter principle of taxation, this anomaly in the property tax credit plan would no longer exist.

Mr. Singer: But it's this government's tax credit.

Mr. Walker: That's correct.

Mr. Singer: It's not the federal government's.

Mr. Walker: Since the property tax credit plan is an integral part of the income tax system, it would be administratively difficult and impractical to have diverging rules to achieve complete equity. The basic shelter rebate programme made no distinction between individuals in different financial circumstances.

Mr. Singer: Shame!

Mr. Walker: The Ontario property tax credit plan has made a major step forwards relating actual burden of property taxes more closely to the ability to pay.

Mr. Singer: But the provincial government's own statute says you can't discriminate against people because of marital status. The member knows it. Shame!

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to say that we should undertake a review of this entire matter—the legal implications, the marital status. In view of the fact that the policy was originally established by TEIGA, we might well take a look into it.

Mr. Lewis: The member for London North is rather less prone to error than the member for London South (Mr. White).

Motion agreed; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be ordered for third reading?

Mr. Singer: No; committee!

Mr. Speaker: Committee of the whole House?

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Lewis: Does the House leader want to do this right now?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Okay!

Mr. Lewis: We'll bring our tax experts in—just a moment.

An hon. member: I thought they were here.

Clerk of the House: The third order, House in committee of the whole; Mr. MacBeth in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

House in committee on Bill 96, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any questions, comments or amendments on section 1 of Bill 96?

On section 1:

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): May I ask the parliamentary assistant, who certainly is vastly more informed on this than I am, where I might appropriately ask him a couple of questions that were raised by my colleague from Riverdale (Mr. Renwick)? On which section would the formula section apply?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Which formula are you questioning?

Mr. Lewis: The first one.

Mr. G. W. Walker (London North): Well, looking at page 1 of Bill 96, it refers to section 1, which happens to be an amendment to section 3 of the Income Tax Act; and the portion applicable for the formula that I gave initially is parts (8)(a) and (8)(b).

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Now please tell him the question to ask.

Mr. Lewis: No, I have decided on that.

Mr. Walker: That's the one with the 30.5 times—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, 49 over 30 by 30.5. I have that tucked away. The Treasurer is very impressed.

Mr. Walker: I am going to ask you that question—

Mr. Lewis: You want to ask questions? I'd be happy to answer them.

Mr. Walker: You wanted the second formula?

Mr. Lewis: No I'm responding to the Chairman, who asked for anything on section 1 of the bill, and I should now like to ask you a question on section 1. As a basic sort of principle of equity, I want to know why you enter into an agreement in 1972 which confirms, as I understand it, an arrangement originating in 1962 that allows the federal government to make these kinds of deductions from an Ontario tax credit, the purpose of which is to direct money to—

Mr. Walker: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. That has nothing to do with this section.

Mr. Lewis: All right, which section do you want me to raise it under?

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 1 carry?

Mr. Lewis: No, I am not going to be quite so easily deterred. The parliamentary assistant succeeded in misleading me; now I want him to lead me. Where does he wish me to raise it?

Mr. Walker: Well, Mr. Chairman, he can raise it under section 2(1), section 2(2) or even section 2(3) of the bill.

An hon. member: But not all of them?

Mr. Lewis: Not all?

Mr. Walker: Only one.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 1 carry?

Section 1 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Now, if the hon. member for Scarborough East would raise his question—

Mr. Lewis: Scarborough West! I'm not in the cabinet yet.

Hon. Mr. White: Actually it was section 1; you are too late.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member accepted their advice and gave in too easily. It was a trap.

Mr. Lewis: As I understand it, your response to the member for Riverdale was that the federal government has recourse under a variety of Acts to deduct from such credits if it wishes, but this particular credit which you introduced is applicable to the year 1972. Clearly the province has to agree to this invasion of the individual which the federal government would wish to pursue.

Why should we allow our direct payment to individuals such as they are in the Province of Ontario, under Ontario tax legislation, to suffer deductions by way of Canada Pension Plan or unemployment insurance for amounts outstanding?

Surely, if the federal government wants to do that it can use its own resources or a collection agency or whatever means it has at its disposal. Why allow a principle of equity introduced by the Ontario government to be used as a way of the federal government getting back amounts owing which may be matters of contentious dispute for the persons who owe them? Why are we allowing ourselves to be used that way?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You weren't blackmailed into this, were you?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, the reasons are really very practical reasons. We really do not have much choice. The federal government firstly has the right to seize under the third-party demands. Whatever rule we may come in with, it can still seize under the third-party demands. There's no question of that.

Hon. Mr. White: The member for Scarborough West should get his daddy after that.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): They can seize money from you?

Mr. Walker: All right, that's the first reason; that's one of the paramount reasons. The second one is that the federal government has said to us, "If you want us to participate in this manner, you are going to have to play basically by the rules that we determine."

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, you were blackmailed, then?

Mr. Renwick: This wasn't in the original one.

Mr. Walker: I think it was.

Mr. Renwick: This is a change. Paragraph (a) was in the original one; (b) and (c) have just been added so you must have made some new changes.

Mr. Walker: They are merely housekeeping.

Mr. Renwick: They are not housekeeping.

Mr. Walker: They certainly are. They relate to the earlier 1962 Act; the original Act. Now, the Act itself was negotiated by TEIGA and it may well be that the minister—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): That's for the province.

Mr. Walker: —the Treasurer may wish to reply in this area.

Mr. Lewis: Well, we have more influence with the federal Liberals than he does.

An hon. member: That's true.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Walker: The fact of the matter is that the tax agreement lays down the rules and we are married to tax rule agreements.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: The Treasurer has something else. Let him get rid of that.

Hon. Mr. White: I might add a further comment. The federal government says, "We will do thus and so for you under these conditions." We have accepted these conditions however onerous because we haven't wanted to face our people with a separate income tax return.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I don't accept that.

Hon. Mr. White: You don't accept anything.

Mr. Renwick: All right, let's get the ground rules correct.

Mr. MacDonald: We didn't accept the energy tax to begin with; you see how right we were.

Hon. Mr. White: You didn't have anything to do with it.

Mr. Renwick: Let's get the ground rules correct.

Mr. Singer: You didn't even wear a sweat-shirt today.

Hon. Mr. White: You didn't have anything to do with it.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Oh, a little bit.

Mr. Martel: You invented that in the back room today.

Mr. Lawlor: Just a minuscule.

Mr. Renwick: I hope you read Bruce West this morning?

Mr. Lewis: Good Lord! Why would he want to do that?

Mr. Renwick: It's one of the rare few times I have read him. He was poking fun at the Treasurer; that's why I read it.

Mr. Martel: I didn't know he had a sense of humour.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Almost everyone is.

Mr. Renwick: This clause in its present form, apart from the changes being introduced now, was enacted in 1972, and this is the first year in which this credit is being granted. I want to make it perfectly clear that this is money which the statute obligates the Treasurer of this province to pay to the taxpayers of this province.

Now, to provide a statutory setoff for moneys owing by the Treasurer of this province to be paid to the federal government, is a statutory form of setoff which I just do not believe that the government of Canada—if any real effort had been made by the Treasurer—would insist it would do only provided that the money could be set off against any claims it would have under the Canada Pension Plan or under the Unemployment Insurance Act. These are, of course, totally unrelated to the Income Tax Act, the income tax form and the procedure by which that calculation is made and the ultimate deduction to which the person is entitled is calculated.

It's one of those ridiculous silly little points which come out in a bill like this disguised as housekeeping. It shows that this government is quite prepared to let moneys it has publicly advertised as being moneys which will be credited to and paid to the taxpayers of this province be diverted for federal government purposes. The federal government, as anyone who has anything to do with the Unemployment Insurance Commission knows, has a very long arm to collect whatever moneys are due to it and doesn't need any assist from the government of the Province of Ontario. After all, it is still a federal country and not a unitary state.

The Treasurer of this province has some obligations with respect to the taxpayers of this province, when they have devoted the number of dollars which they have devoted to advertising this as a credit which will produce money to the taxpayers of this province not by way of setoff.

You couldn't possibly, without a statutory enactment, set it off. The rules of setoff are, as anyone knows, very limited. I don't agree with this kind of a ridiculous extension of that statutory right.

Mr. Chairman: Any reply from the parliamentary assistant?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, it is hardly ridiculous. I think it is a recognition of the fact that in the negotiations we are relatively powerless no matter what we desire, due to the fact that the third-party demands that are totally available to the federal government make it impossible or impractical for us to suggest any other form of payment of this particular money. We have no choice.

Mr. Singer: We will get a better deal after the next election, I will tell you.

Mr. Lewis: What's that?

Mr. Singer: We will get a better deal after the next election.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Not from the member for Sudbury's friends.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury. Do you have a different point from that of the member for Downsview?

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): No.

Mr. Singer: Different from the one that they've been discussing.

Mr. Chairman: Then, the hon. member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the point I was making on second reading of this bill is reflected in section 2, subsection (3), clause f and section 2, subsection (7), where the principles set out in this tax credit notice are given statutory authority. I thought that the parliamentary assistant was being most reasonable when he admitted that the complaint I received from this lady was, in fact, a valid one, and that there was discrimination, as in two people who were living together, and also in the definitions that follow, as are set out in the explanatory notice and now in the statute. If the recognition is there, and even the parliamentary assistant admits that this is an unfair attitude to take to married people, and—

Mr. Lawlor: Surely marriage should involve some sacrifice.

Mr. Singer: —if you are contravening the provisions of your own Human Rights Code, surely this is the time to do something about it. I can't quite figure out how any action of the federal government really concerns itself with a Province of Ontario tax credit notice. What this woman says is obviously correct. In taxation dollars, she would be further ahead to divorce her husband and stay living in the same house in common law. Then she could get advantage of the tax credit. As long as she stays married to him, she can't.

Mr. Walker: We are banking on her not doing that.

Mr. Singer: I think that's grossly unfair. This lady is not a stupid or uninformed person at all. She has investigated the possibility of taking legal action. I think the government would look pretty stupid if, in fact, she did bring an action before the Supreme Court for declaration that this notice, and now the statute, are contrary to the provisions of the Human Rights Code.

It isn't up to me to try to draft an amendment to your confusing notice and your discriminatory sections, but there they are. We know they are there and you admit they are there. Before this bill goes any further, surely you should take it back and get your people who are sitting under the gallery to work out a suitable amendment which will remove the discrimination. It just doesn't make sense that you should discriminate in this fashion against married people who are both working. That's what you're doing, and you admit that that's what you're doing.

Is it sensible that one arm of government keeps the airwaves busy by talking about the wonders and the improvements brought to the Province of Ontario by the Human Rights Commission? For a long period of time you have had regular paid advertisements saying, "If you have problems with discrimination that are covered by the Human Rights Code, come and see us at the commission and we'll look after it, as we've got legislation."

This lady goes to the Human Rights Commission. I have read you what the Human Rights Commission said. There was more to it than that. Over the phone, the lady who signed the letter, Mrs. Ethel Neville, said, "Well, you really don't expect us to crack our parliamentary authority against the head of the Treasurer."

Perhaps she didn't say it in quite that way, but she was inquiring as to how the Human Rights Commission, or some senior civil servant who works for that commission, can really bring any power to bear against all the might of the Treasury benches.

This is the time, Mr. Chairman, when it should be done. The statute is here right now. So I would ask the minister, if he hasn't got a properly phrased and worded amendment ready to bring before us, to withdraw the bill for an hour or so and bring it back in an hour's time with an amendment which will remove this apparent, obvious and admitted discriminatory section.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury—on the same section?

Mr. Germa: No, another section, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: We did skip subsection (1)—is it past subsection (2) that we are presently talking about?

Mr. Germa: Subsection (1), Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: We had better permit the member to go back on subsection (1) then.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary assistant recognized my complaint on second reading in his answer about occupancy costs and he did admit that there was some inequity and there was some unfairness in the definition. However, he did treat it rather lightly when he said it only amounts to $600 on one particular—

Mr. Walker: No, $6.

Mr. Germa: —well $6—on one particular set of figures that he chose to run through a computer. This was based on a $300 offset for services such as cable television, parking, heat, light, steam baths, common room, all these luxuries that go into the rental package in a highrise apartment.

It wouldn't be too bad if the discrimination was in the right direction, but I think we are all well aware who lives in highrise luxury apartments. It is not the low or average income earner; it is usually the top income earner in any community, and there is no reason why this bill should be left to discriminate in this fashion against people who really would appreciate the $6 a year.

I don't for one moment even accept that the extra fringes attached to highrise living amount to only $300 a year. I have just made a rapid calculation of costs which would accrue to my own particular house in one year, and parking, heat, light and cable television would give me a figure of $588, and that doesn't include the swimming pool, the laundromat, or the common room. So in no way can I even accept that there is only a $300 offset in the package on highrise living.

That government's main opposition to the thing is that it would be an administrative nightmare to try to separate parking, heat and light, and swimming pool from what is known as pure rent. I would suggest to the parliamentary assistant that he has already done that in the case of a person rooming and boarding. The person who is paying room and board has to separate the amount of his board from that portion of his monthly contribution which is pure rent, so I would suggest that if the administration is there to separate board from room, then all one has to do is extend the exclusions.

I am sure every operator of an apartment block knows what is the pure rent. He knows what his heating costs are, and he knows what his water costs are. He knows his parking-lot costs and he knows his steam-bath costs. It would be no problem at all. It wouldn't be any administration at all, because we have already done it once in the case of room and board being separated. In no way can the tax filer include board for exemption to receive this credit.

So, you see, you have got yourself caught in your own flypaper, your stuff just does not stick. It is already in there.

I recognize why the government is not concerned about these people in highrise getting this extra added benefit. This government bends over backwards in favour of affluence, the fine people in our community, and it shows very little concern for someone who is pressed to the wall to pay taxes. Even $6 is something to be concerned with when you live on a minimal income. That is only 50 cents a month. I know some people who haven't got the 50 cents a month to spare. They go from payday to payday and they're broke three days ahead of payday. That might be the 50 cents they want that week. It could keep them going for another day.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Even someone in this chamber.

Mr. Germa: So don't pass it off as only $6. And your figures are not even correct, as I pointed out. In no way is $300 an accurate figure; $600 computed on top of the rent would be more likely the differential between what is received in pure rent and these added features. So I can't accept it and I think the parliamentary assistant should take another look at this.

If you don't want to go backwards on the thing how about another proposition? If a guy living in a highrise apartment deducts parking costs, cable TV costs, water, hydro and all these luxury items that go to highrise living, well, grant the individual homeowner the same privilege. Let the homeowner add to his occupancy cost—and it is actually an occupancy cost; what good is a house without heat? Heat is part of occupancy cost. In the case of highrise it is, so why not in the case of a homeowner? Electricity — a house is no good without electricity.

Let the individual homeowner have the same privilege as the one who lives in the highrise and who won't have to have any administration whatsoever. Let him add those same things in and then let's go through the calculation again. I'm sure you'd come to a more equitable solution.

I'm not in favour of expanding the bureaucracy. God forbid that, we've got enough of it. So if that's your only holdup, just grant us all the same privilege that the guy in the highrise has, because this fellow in the highrise usually does not need this advantage over anyone else.

You're talking about equitability in all your programmes: "We do this to equalize the impact upon various groups." Well, here's another case of discriminating against the poor section, because the poor section of our society is not living in those fancy highrises. They're down in those slummy apartments which don't even come with heat. You supply your own heat in some of these joints. And they all pay their own hydro. Most of them pay their own water and they park someplace down the street. So you're clearly discriminating against the man who hasn't got the wherewithal to defend himself.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman, on this same point.

Mr. Chairman: Let me just check with the hon. member. Is your point on section 2 subsection (1)?

Mr. Lawlor: Mine's on section 2, subsection (4).

Mr. Chairman: All right, then, we'll hold that. Is yours on 2(1)?

Mr. Good: Yes, on the same point—

Mr. Lawlor: And then I have one that covers the waterfront!

Mr. Good: —occupancy cost. Mr. Chairman, it's the same matter of the unfair treatment being given property owners as compared to people living in highrise on occupancy cost. And I would like to read into the record excerpts from a letter received by me:

" . . . the principle of Ontario property tax credit is unfair because it gives an advantage to the person who rents over the person who owns a home.

For example, take the case of a person in this city [and he's speaking of the city of Waterloo] who rents a two-bedroom apartment in a good apartment building and pays $250 per month, or $3,000 per annum. The rate covers water, hydro, parking in a covered garage, cable TV, use of a common recreation area, taxes and interest on investment, repairs, decorating and profit for the owner. The occupancy cost then is 20 per cent of the $3,000, or $600.

The property taxes for a comparable house [and this letter, I may say as an aside, is written by a municipal employee who knows his way around as far as the comparable conditions of taxation in the city are concerned] would be $400 (mine are substantially less than this amount). The owner must pay extra for water, hydro, repairs, redecorating and is not allowed anything for the interest on his investment. How can you possibly consider this an equitable arrangement in figuring out occupancy cost?

In 1972 a leak developed in the plumbing of my house and it cost over $2,000 to repair and renovate. A person who rents doesn't have costs of this type, but you give him an additional advantage under the tax credit plan.

On the form which came with my income tax papers you show the maximum credit is $250. The only way I can come up with anyone qualifying for the maximum is a ridiculous situation of a person who makes $5,000 a year, who pays $2,100 a year, or a tenant who pays $10,500 in rent.

Then you send me a tax credit notice which advertises you, the Treasurer and the Minister of Revenue, which I help to pay for out of a general fund for printing and delivery, and says "Special tax benefit to Ontario residents." For some reason, I am not laughing.

Mr. Premier [and I will say this letter is addressed to the Premier] it seems to me your experts are giving you advice which is not realistic. Some of us are fed up with these charades, flim flams, and snow jobs, and are objecting in the only way left to us.

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. Good: He goes on:

I don't object to paying my fair share, but I do object to being considered stupid. It would seem to me that voters in the two recent by-elections share my views, and you lost two strong Conservative seats.

And this is a point I think which many people—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): A true-tempered letter.

Mr. Good: Oh yes. —many people living in average types of homes where the taxes are only $300 or $400 a year, as they are in some of the areas in the city—

Hon. Mr. White: Do you think apartment dwellers are undertaxed?

Mr. Good: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. White: Do you think people in apartments are undertaxed?

Mr. Good: No, I am not saying they are undertaxed. I think they are getting an advantage—

Mr. Deans: Sit and listen!

Mr. Good: They are getting an advantage in the way you figure the occupancy costs. Now if you can hand up such a lucrative tax credit to them, I think you should then do the same for those people who are living in property with taxes of $300 or $400. You know what the situation is.

Hon. Mr. White: What are the property taxes on these two dwellings?

Mr. Good: What two dwellings?

Hon. Mr. White: The point I am making is this. In the city of Toronto we learned, during the meetings of the select committee on taxation, apartments were assessed at, I think it was 43 per cent of the market value, while single-family dwellings were assessed at, I think it was, 27 per cent of market value. Which is to say the apartment property tax per unit—

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): That has nothing to do with it at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh yes, it has everything to do with it.

Mr. Good: Not with how occupancy cost is figured.

Hon. Mr. White: It has everything to do with it.

Mr. Good: We are talking about what makes occupancy cost.

Mr. Singer: Besides which, your percentage figures are wrong.

Hon. Mr. White: These words on how hard done by the highrise apartment dwellers are—

Mr. Lewis: You have more respect when you talk about us in this House!

Mr. Chairman: Are there any other questions in regard to section 2, subsection (1)?

Mr. Lewis: Let's have the response.

Mr. Chairman: I just want to get the questions first and I think yours is on (2). So are there any other questions in regard to 2, subsection (1)?

Mr. Deans: There may be after we hear the response.

Mr. Lewis: There is a waterfront observation right here.

Mr. Chairman: He's on (4). The waterfront's on (4).

Mr. Lewis: Oh.

Mr. Chairman: Will the parliamentary assistant answer please?

Mr. Walker: I think the waterfront was on second reading and that's over with.

Mr. Lewis: That is just your hope.

Mr. Lawlor: This is the waterfront on third reading.

Mr. Walker: The member for Sudbury raised certain matters. He indicated that $300 was an inappropriate appraisal for the cost of these various utilities, and that may very well be. However, I might explain to the member that it was his colleague, the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside (Mr. Burr), who wrote to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) and it is from that particular set of circumstances that this reply has been framed.

I took that particular correspondence out last evening and the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside cited a case where there were utilities, etc., that totalled $300 per year. And in that particular example, the difference was $6. No doubt for those individuals such as yourself who pay more for utilities and other benefits in your own particular accommodation, the figure may well be higher and accordingly the actual difference in benefit may be somewhat higher.

Now, the member raised the question with respect to the actual difference of benefiting a certain segment of society. Let's keep in mind that the higher the occupancy cost, generally speaking, the higher the rent; and generally speaking the greater the taxable income—thereby causing a far greater deduction. The one per cent of the taxable income would be somewhat higher. No doubt the individual of whom the member is speaking who pays perhaps in that area for utilities, may well find that he is getting little, if any, return on his property tax credit. So there is an offsetting balance to what you are suggesting.

In addition to that, all other factors taken into account—the complexity of altering the forms, the complexity of requiring the individual homeowner to attempt to segregate the utilities and the cable and the ping-pong table and everything else from his pure rent, and even the complexity of a landlord trying to do that, and the complexity that the provincial government would suffer, and the complexity which the federal government would suffer in attempting to administer this—all suggest that the difference is not sufficiently important to warrant the alteration.

Mr. Germa: Well, Mr. Chairman, could I just respond briefly?

Mr. Chairman: Is the member asking another question? Yes.

Mr. Germa: It would be no problem to me to add on to my taxes the amount of fuel I used last year or the amount of electricity—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, you can't interrupt us.

Mr. Bullbrook: What is this!

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. What is the objection?

Mr. Singer: I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. You have no right to order this debate. This debate goes on as long as the members want it to go on.

Mr. Chairman: I don't think I ordered it. He asked if he could make a response.

Mr. Singer: As long as he didn't ask the same question. The Chairman has no right to direct him how to speak. Nonsense!

Mr. Chairman: Let me finish my answer. I said he could ask another question.

Mr. Singer: He could speak on the debate as long as it was relevant.

Mr. Chairman: I said he could ask another question. We will proceed with the hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I don't feel offended because I didn't hear your admonition anyway.

But I would like to respond, Mr. Chairman. The complexities the government has put into this thing are really not there. It would be no problem for me to add to my taxes the amount of fuel I use—I know that exactly. My parking costs—I know that exactly.

So that there wouldn't be any administration costs on my behalf as far as the government is concerned, and it would be to the benefit of the taxpayer. I am sure he wouldn't complain. Then we would all start out on an equal plane.

We would all be equitable then as far as occupancy cost is concerned and the government's one per cent deduction on taxable income would take over and further equalize the tax burden on various people across the province.

I can't accept administration as a factor in removing it because I am sure the taxpayers of Ontario, living in these circumstances, are willing to do the administration for the government.

Mr. Walker: It may not be very difficult for the member for Sudbury to add on his electricity costs and to add on his fuel costs and to add on his cable TV costs and to add on various other utility costs, such as his gas costs and so on, where there are billings that apply two months at a time and one month at a time. But I dare say in the preparation of the purple sheet—which is inserted in the federal income tax form—that it would be rather difficult for a number of people in this province to complete that; and the importance of these forms and avoiding the complexity, I think, is paramount.

Mr. Deans: Not so!

Mr. Good: Clutching at straws.

Mr. Deans: Why doesn't the government try it and see?

Mr. Lewis: Now you are arguing class.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, now that we have left that one, could I get a reply to the point I was making earlier?

Mr. Chairman: Let me clear this one. Are there any other questions on section 2, subsection (1)? Does the subsection carry?

Agreed!

Now, I believe the member for Downsview has a question on subsection (2).

Mr. Singer: Yes, on (2).

Mr. Chairman: Are there any other questions on subsection (2) of section 2? Then does the parliamentary assistant recall the question in order to reply?

Mr. Walker: No, I don't.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on! I made two speeches about it this afternoon. If the member wants, I will make it over again. All right! Very briefly I—

Mr. Chairman: The chairman takes responsibility for it. I got out of order.

Mr. Singer: I asked the parliamentary assistant that since he admitted that this was inequitable, and since the government is now enshrining it in legislation, why doesn't he take back those two subsections to which I referred, draft an amendment, and bring it back in an hour's time and remove the inequity. Because it's against the government's statute and it isn't fair and the member admits it isn't fair; so do something about it!

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I did not admit it was inequitable. I did say that it is correct that in the case of married couples the spouse with the higher taxable income is eligible to claim the property tax credit, and that in the case of unmarried couples each member is considered a principal taxpayer and eligible for the credit. I don't think you will find there any comment in respect to inequity. If the hon. member wishes to offer an amendment, it might be considered.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Didn't even say it was a fair deal.

Mr. Singer: Now surely the member is smarter than that. You did say—and I haven't got the instant Hansard here but you look at it—you said you agree substantially with what is said.

This lady makes a very good point. The Human Rights Commission agrees with her. You've admitted this is correct. Now why should you treat different taxpayers in a different way? It's not fair. You have these sections here. Surely it isn't up to me to attempt to redraft a very complicated section of a very complicated act. Since the inequity is obvious, and it is obvious to you and it is obvious to me, why don't you take it back for an hour and have your experts redraft it in a form that will be palatable and make it equitable. It is just as simple as that.

Mrs. Campbell: Take out the discrimination; surely that isn't too much!

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, we are certainly prepared to consider that aspect of it. However, we are still bound by an agreement whereby this is completely a part of our tax rental agreement. How can we change it at this point without some degree of negotiation going on?

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman; this has nothing to do with an agreement. This is the Ontario tax credit.

Mr. Walker: Well it is the tax rental agreement by which this is collected.

Mr. Singer: But in your forms you set out the basis on which you allow credits. In your statute you are now about to set out the basis on which you apply credits. I don't think you are going to indicate to me any provision in any agreement you have with the federal government that says you must discriminate against married wage-earners who are living together and give them an unfair burden, which you don't attach to unmarried wage-earners who are not living together. Now there is no such provision in any rental agreement you have with the government of Canada, at least to my knowledge. If there is such a provision show me where it is.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, there is no actual statement within the tax rental agreement which says we shall discriminate against people. However, there is an agreement by which these forms have been prepared, and they are all part of the subsections and sections of that tax rental agreement. If you want to change that, we are talking about a negotiation to change them.

Now we are prepared to consider a negotiation to change it. But that is how it must stand. It is obviously not going to be done in the next hour.

Mr. Singer: Well Mr. Chairman, if what the parliamentary assistant say is correct, then he is saying you have gone ahead and prepared forms for which you didn't have statutory authority. Because you are presently asking for statutory authority to do this. You sent out your notices about tax credits. They state what is in this statute; that we haven't passed yet.

Now how are you going to ask anybody to revise anything, because the enabling legislation that would carry out the provisions of this tax credit notice or part of them is presently here before us? Why are we asking you to change anything, except what you have done without authority?

Mr. Walker: Which section are you referring to?

Mr. Singer: I was referring to sections 2(3)(f) and 2(7) where you define principal taxpayer; and where you define what happens when two or more principal taxpayers together occupy and inhabit the same principal residence.

Now that is what you are doing; and you are doing it now. You jumped the gun when you sent out these tax credit notices; and you jumped the gun when you got your forms prepared. You didn't have enabling legislation, because apparently this is the enabling legislation.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, in section 6 b (1)(f) we are merely amending the existing definition under 6 b (1)(f) of principal taxpayer, which in the old Act was about 2 or 3 in. long, and which in the new Act has an extra inch to it. The only alteration is that section 6 b, (1)(f) (iii).

Mr. Bullbrook: You are not helping any. Don't think you are fooling us; he knows more about it than you do.

Mr. Singer: Well the parliamentary assistant obviously is prepared to enshrine again in legislation something that is obviously inequitable. It is inequitable on the face of it; it is inequitable in the statute; the Human Rights Commission agrees it is inequitable. It allows you to discriminate against a married woman who is living with her husband and both of them are wage-earners. If that's what the government is determined that it is going to do, so be it; and people will know about it. I am merely asking him to remove an obvious inequity which he knows is there, which I know is there, which this lady who wrote to me knows is there; and now is his chance to do it. Be a hero today!

Mr. Chairman: Any reply from the parliamentary assistant? Any further questions in regard to 2(2)?

Subsection (2) of section 2 agreed to. In regard to subsection (3), any questions there? I think the hon. member for Lakeshore probably has priority, if you would.

Mr. Lawlor: Let the member for Kitchener go on, I have nothing against the guy.

Mr. Chairman: He is ruling the chairman out of order. Will you please proceed?

Mr. Breithaupt: Well, I am glad that control is clear within the operation of the committee, Mr. Chairman.

The matter which I raised with the parliamentary assistant dealt particularly with visiting professors. I appreciated the comment which he made in response on second reading, but I think there still is some merit in proposing an amendment to this section in order that this problem can be resolved.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the particular problem is one where persons may have been receiving a benefit during a one- or two-year stay within Canada and then decide to remain in the country. By deciding to remain they perhaps should not be eligible for the benefit which they had already received, so that there could be the possibility of some abuse in this particular circumstance.

I am not saying the abuse is going to be a particularly large item, nor might it be that there are a large number of persons who are going to be involved. But I do think that where we are giving particular tax benefits, they should be given to people who are receiving them on certain clear terms. If the terms are not met by the individual, or if the individual changes the situation in which he or she is receiving this benefit, then I think there should be some recourse within the statute.

I would put it to the parliamentary secretary that there would be merit in adding to subsection (3) of section 2, and making in effect a subsection (iv) to that subsection (f) referred to therein, something along the following lines: "A non-Canadian professor or teacher visiting Canada, who received in that year any special benefit under the federal Act." It may be that the wording of this is not fully acceptable or does not completely encompass the problem, but I think the principle is clear in that anyone who might be involved in a possible abuse of this situation would not receive the benefit.

I do commend an amendment in that form to the parliamentary secretary and I would hope that he would see his way clear to ensure that the exemption under principal taxpayer situations would as well apply to that form as subsection (iv).

Mr. Chairman: Any other questions in regard to subsection (3)?

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Let him reply!

Mr. Chairman: I was going to let him reply to them all at once. Do you wish to reply to them individually?

Mr. Bullbrook: May I just rise on a point of order? Not being offensive at all but it completely detracts from the well-established purpose of debate in committee to undertake what, in effect, are the rules of debate on second reading, because there might want to be continuation of dialogue.

Mr. Chairman: All right. I follow the reasoning. If the member would reply please.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I can't agree more with the member for Kitchener. However, I'm not prepared to make any alteration by way of amendment at this point in time, because I really think that you are stealing the thunder of the select committee on economic and cultural nationalism. You might well consult your associate beside you for his particular opinion on it. The committee is making a determination on this very question and it's my guess that they'll come down with opinions not dissimilar from what you are suggesting.

Mr. Stokes: Another leak!

Mr. Walker: However, at this point in time it would be inappropriate and it would certainly be premature to attempt to make the alteration, particularly in view of the fact that, if the recommendations of the committee happen to be in this particular direction, the recommendation may well be enveloped in legislation sometime in the future.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Mr. Chairman, I don't think the parliamentary assistant should anticipate what the committee may or may not do. Maybe we're doing the same thing in anticipating what the committee may not do.

I believe that he should deal with the legislation that is before him and not with what the select committee may or may not do. In fact, if the select committee moves in one direction and recommends that it will leave it to the federal government to do it—and of course they are very prone over there to say that the federal government usually doesn't act anyway — perhaps he should do it now and stop waiting for a committee report that may or may not contain something that has been referred to.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I am very sympathetic to what the member for Nipissing says. However, the committee is really wrestling with the problem.

The committee as recently as yesterday; as you will recall, thought there was a complexity to the problem far greater than just the matter of foreign nationals in our province collecting the benefits of this tax credit. Its members felt the problem may well extend beyond the question of the professors and might well go to those on NATO contingency; might go to those connected with the World Bank or many other organizations which may be related in this country and in this province.

Accordingly, I think it is just premature to attempt to second-guess the committee, particularly when the committee is spending a great deal of time on this very question. I would hate to be the member for Nipissing appearing before the select committee's next meeting!

Mr. R. S. Smith: It doesn't really bother me at all because the legislation is here and the committee is not, until perhaps next month or next year sometime.

Mr. Walker: Next Wednesday.

Mr. R. S. Smith: But not dealing with this subject particularly in regard to the tax. It is a question—

Mr. Chairman: Is there any other discussion on section 2, subsection (3)?

Agreed to.

The hon. member for Lakeshore; on subsection (4) I understand.

Mr. Lawlor: I can tell, Mr. Chairman, that you have been sitting there with hungry anticipation having called upon these learned comments on several occasions without effect. I know you are heartbroken and chagrined.

Hon. Mr. White: Turn up the microphone!

Mr. Bullbrook: He meant turn it the other way.

Mr. Lawlor: But now your countenance may brighten. We'll get on with it. I want to talk about the tax rental agreements for a moment under this section, which is the mulcting section of the bill.

As I understand those agreements, and perhaps you can clarify this for me, if you're brought within the benison of the federal government, it is prepared to do the collecting on its terms without taking any quid pro quo with respect to those collections. In other words, it does it free of charge. The government of Ontario saves very considerable sums of money because of this largess coming from the federal source, and the reason for the accommodation having been achieved after the Second World War was precisely this.

But under this particular proposal coming from yourselves, they thought they would add springers, or riders, or whatever they may be, and you said: "Well, all right, if we're going to do this for you we expect something in return and if there is any money floating around—the tax spread over and above the terms of the tax credit—rather than return it we are going to put it in our coffers and these are the conditions upon which we are prepared to negotiate."

Would that be a fair picture of what went on? Or what is the picture?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I didn't negotiate the agreement. The member for London South would be more appropriately versed in this matter.

Mr. Lawlor: Well then, let the member for London South—

Mr. Walker: However, I rather suspect that was some of it—a quid pro quo.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, I didn't negotiate it either. The fact of the matter is the federal government collects these taxes for us because in so doing it gains indirect influence over our tax structure which it then utilizes for the overall fiscal policy of Canada, in a way that cannot be done with the Quebec income tax which is completely beyond Ottawa's purview.

To illustrate, the most recent budget of the Minister of Finance for Canada made certain changes, as you know, in the exemptions provided—for a minimum $100 relief from taxation and so forth—the consequence of which was to remove $25 million from our 1973-1974 revenues. It collaterally transferred $190 million into other provinces—much of which, naturally enough, was paid for by Ontario taxpayers.

The Quebec plan was not touched at all by those federal changes. I quite understand the implicit quid pro quo enjoyed by the government of Canada. It collects these moneys for us free, gratis, and in the process it has a little more control over the total fiscal policy in effect in this economy.

Now, dealing with the claim against credit, I'm sorry I don't know the background of that; I didn't have any knowledge of the negotiations at that time. The fact is incapable that the federal government has a very strong position in any negotiations, assuming only that we don't want to impose a separate collection system on our people. So certain of the changes in here no doubt spring from its determination to gain certain rights, no doubt including this particular claim against credit which it has insisted upon.

Mr. Lawlor: I take it the basic answer to the question was that it does absorb the administrative costs of the whole system and then is asking something in return on this particular occasion.

Mr. Walker: No, I might just correct that. The federal government charges one per cent of the amount of moneys collected—pardon me, one per cent of the property tax credit programme, the entire programme. They have a charging fee on it of one per cent.

Mr. Lawlor: They do, eh? Then you have something to argue about.

Mr. Walker: They don't charge for the actual collection. That's a fee they've imposed. In addition to that, we do have a benefit—this quid pro quo bit—in that from the taxes collected in the province, we receive all the moneys directly from the federal government as assessed. They bear the charge and they bear the arrears but the arrears do not matter for us.

Mr. Lawlor: Have you an estimate of what that one per cent might mean in terms of dollars?

Mr. Walker: I don't know what you mean.

Mr. Lawlor: You said they do make a charge of one per cent with respect to the property tax credit, and based upon that property tax credit what does that come to in hard cash?

Mr. Walker: One point six million dollars.

Mr. Lawlor: On a wider range, with respect to this present Act—and I'm sure the present minister must be presently involved and responsible for the added tax credits that are forthcoming—I would have thought that they would have been forthcoming in the terms of this particular legislation. After all, in theory all taxes from different tax fields diverse from income tax flow into the central income tax channel; and, using the income tax as the device, the credits are given, the refunds are made and the whole system works. But you haven't anything in here with respect to either the pension tax credit or the retail sales tax credit. What is the situation on that at the present time and how could you go forward with legislation without including those?

Hon. Mr. White: In fact, we have no such agreement, as the Ontario budget of April 12 revealed. Frankly, I didn't feel free to enter into these negotiations with the Minister of Finance for Canada before the budget was delivered here. I will be meeting him on May 8, at which time we are going to put these requests to him. My expectation, based on the previous acquiescence, is that he will agree to this; and then of course it will be formalized by legislation.

Mr. Martel: What if he says no?

Mr. Lawlor: You will have trouble if he says no.

Hon. Mr. White: If they say no, then we will have to find an alternative.

Mr. Lawlor: You will have to start a new department.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I think he won't say no in a hurry, for reasons I touched on a minute ago.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion in regard to subsection (4)?

Mr. Lawlor: Will there be a ripoff there too?

Mr. Chairman: Shall subsection (4) carry?
Subsection (4) agreed to.

Shall subsection (5) carry?
Agreed to.

Shall section 3 carry?
Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 4 carry?
Section 4 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the bill be reported?
Bill 96 reported.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report one bill without amendment and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

RETAIL SALES TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves second reading of Bill 98, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): One presumes, Mr. Speaker, that this was marked down from 100.

In the fervour of the public outcry against the imposition of the retail sales tax on energy, it seems unfortunate that one major thing has been forgotten by the citizens of Ontario; that is, the imposition of a 40 per cent increase in the retail sales tax rate.

The point which must be made, and it has been made before, is that in our opinion this tax increase is simply not necessary. This government has always underestimated its tax revenues. Last year alone the budgeted deficit of $800 million was reduced to about $470 million as a result of increases made in personal and corporate income tax revenues.

These are the tax revenues most responsive to economic activity in the province; and this government fails to be able to predict economic activity, particularly as it relates to gross provincial product, unemployment rates and consumer spending.

Obviously the province's ongoing battle with Ottawa makes it blind to federal initiatives which are meant to buoy the economy across the country and from which Ontario, as Canada's richest province, receives the greatest benefits. One would think that the Premier (Mr. Davis) sees himself as the Leader of the Opposition in Ottawa rather than as the Premier of this province. Perhaps he has his eye on that job and wants to prove his stuff; or maybe he just finds the present incumbent inadequate.

Again this year federal initiatives in reducing taxes will mean even greater economic activity in Ontario. Recent unemployment statistics show that unemployment across the country is now 5.9 per cent. It is expected to decline to five per cent or less at the end of the year. Ontario's unemployment rate now stands at 3.9 per cent and should, hopefully, continue to fall. The Treasurer (Mr. White) has predicted an unemployment rate for 1973 of 4.4 per cent, which he relates to an 11 per cent increase in the gross provincial product.

Yet there is no reason, Mr. Speaker, to doubt that the actual unemployment rate will be four per cent or lower, so that we can expect an increase in the gross provincial product of something closer to 13 per cent.

Other statistics indicate dramatic increases in consumer consumption which should increase steadily throughout the year. Consequently, we believe that a sales tax rate of five per cent, combined with greater personal and corporate taxes, means that $3.15 billion, which the Treasurer estimates he needs from these three tax sources, can easily be achieved without the 40 per cent increase in retail sales tax.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer insists that he must increase taxes to finance the inefficiencies of this government and to attempt to reduce the public debt. This debt has almost doubled in the past two years under the presumed leadership of the Premier as he recklessly spent vast sums of the taxpayers' money, first for getting elected in 1971, and then for fulfilling his pre-election giveaway promises.

Given this fiscal nightmare—which is a phrase that we have heard in this Legislature before—and the decision to raise taxes, one wonders why the Treasurer chose to use a tax which is shown to be regressive and inflationary. I would recommend both to the Treasurer and the Premier, although the Premier seems reluctant to admit that he had anything to do with the budget—

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Don't blame him.

Mr. Breithaupt: —the report prepared by a member of the Economic Council of Canada which has been referred to earlier by the member for York South. The gentleman's name is Mr. Allan Maslove and the report is entitled, "The Pattern of Taxation in Canada."

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The provincial Treasurer never read it, that's the problem.

Mr. Breithaupt: Well, this report, Mr. Speaker, shows quite dramatically the regressive nature of the sales tax. And I would also suggest that, before it crumbles away into dust, he review the report of the Ontario Committee on Taxation which says that retail sales taxes are inflationary as consumer prices and wages increase as a result of them. I am sure that the minister would remember the words in that report because I think he had a great part in the writing of them.

The sales tax credit which the Treasurer has proposed is simply not adequate to cover the regressive nature of this tax. Surely the amount of the credit is insignificant when it's compared with the total tax burden of the citizens of our province.

So there you have it. We don't need a tax increase; we don't want a tax increase; but this government is determined to give us a tax increase. Should they be successful, it must be made quite clear that it is the wrong tax that has been increased.

For these reasons we cannot support the bill and that is the only reasonable conclusion which can be drawn. So if we assume rationale on the part of the government, and there is evidence to suggest that we are being unreasonable in this assumption, then why is the tax being increased?

Well, the tax was increased to build up revenues, of course. The revenues have been underestimated in order that the government may show what they term to be, and I quote, "a manageable deficit." If we were to return in one year to a position of a small deficit or even a balanced budget, one would have to question why we have been living with deficits of $500 million in the last two years.

In fact, I have stated before and I state again that when the results come in next year at this time, we will probably have a balanced budget. This is assuming, of course, that supplementary estimates, which we have come to expect every December, do not amount to $200 million or $300 million, and also assuming that the expenditures through orders-in-council which are not approved by the Legislature do not run much higher than the usual $100 million to $150 million.

The reason why revenues must be built up is obvious. We have seen it many times in the past. The pattern has always been that in the year prior to an election, the government spends large sums of money on giveaway programmes. During the election there are more expensive promises made, which must be financed in the following year. This is something the people of Ontario have looked forward to every four or five years over the past 30 years.

The difference this time is that the Premier finds himself on the horns of a dilemma. It has become obvious—it was obvious on March 15 and it was obvious during the public outcry of just last week over the imposition of the sales tax on energy — that people are getting sick and tired of government spending, and the consequent increase in tax. They feel they would like to do some of the spending of their own money themselves.

So the Premier must decide in 1974 whether he should increase spending or decrease taxes. It is now not clear which is the best alternative for presumably winning an election campaign. But given this need for increased taxes and thus revenues, the Premier and the Treasurer needed some way to introduce this whopping 40 per cent increase in the retail sales tax rate without causing an uprising.

I'm not suggesting for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that this government is devious or cynical. However, it doesn't strain the imagination too much to see good old Bill and good old John sitting down and trying to think of a way to increase the sales tax without anyone realizing it.

The Premier, of course, could say something like this: "John, let's tax energy, but we won't ease in two per cent this year and four per cent next, and finally bring it up to the level of the retail sales tax; let's hit them with the full seven per cent this year. They will be so concerned about that tax they won't notice that we have increased the retail sales tax by 40 per cent, and if we have to withdraw it, well, maybe we can do it the year before the election."

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): The member gives them too much credit.

Mr. Breithaupt: "And if the outcry is really bad, we can even withdraw it completely. And don't worry, John, I'll tell them I've got complete confidence in you. We won't even listen to the calls for your resignation and it can't hurt you politically because, as you say, you are not going to run again."

Hon. J. White (Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs): I think it is pretty decent of the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) to write this speech for the member.

Mr. Breithaupt: Well, in any event, let's just presume that that hypothetical conversation might well have taken place.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): The minister should remember his backbenchers have still got the Dalton Camp commission report to come in yet.

Mr. Breithaupt: I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that we could be more charitable and suggest that the Treasurer simply made a gross error in judgement.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): No, he made a "Grossman" error.

Mr. Breithaupt: I suppose, Mr. Speaker, who make gross errors in judgement usually resign.

In any event he introduced the measure in his budget, and lo and behold, for the first time in living memory—and that goes back 30 years in this province—the House divided on the introduction of a bill. And, mirabile dictu, we even had the situation of one lone Conservative backbencher voting with the opposition.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): He should be cited for bravery.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, it would appear that he has won prizes, awards, probably first place in a flower show, and various other things. I see he is shown in the pictures in newspapers as turning on lights and bringing both joy and jubilation to the people of the province. One would think, unfortunately, that that lone member was the sole cause of the situation that saw such a dramatic and great change in the tax programme which the Treasurer had introduced.

There are, I suppose, some of us on this side of the House who rather thought that our comments had been fairly clear on the matter. However, since the end result was one which was worthwhile, let us presume to give credit to the person who is prepared to take it.

I think that for the first time, the people of this province have had the opportunity of commenting and getting a quick response out of this government. That response may only be the result of some temporary belief in the ability of the people to actually have an input in the tax programmes of the province. There are those of us who hope that the result may be a longer-term one.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, we will be voting against this bill, and perhaps this time we won't have only one lone Tory backbencher who recognizes the inequity of this tax. During last week there were many who were quoted in the paper as wanting to talk against it in caucus. There were many who said they would vote against it on the floor, and presumably their comments were based only with respect to the matter of energy tax.

But I think when this vote is called on this bill, it will be interesting to see how those backbenchers who opposed this kind of taxation as being regressive and inflationary, who opposed it as being harmful on the poorer citizens of the province and those living on fixed incomes, who opposed it because of the hundreds of letters they received from their own constituents, will stand up and be counted this time. In the imposition of this tax now, this government will be taking many more millions of dollars from the people who can ill afford to pay it, than they ever would have taken through the simple aspect of the energy tax—reprehensible and perhaps even abhorrent though that might be.

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. Gisborn: Where's the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith) now?

Mr. Breithaupt: I hope the press will record that the opposition is going to be voting against this bill, because it is going to be interesting to see how many others on the government side of this House will join with us. Hopefully, the people of this province will again try to influence their members, whether they are on the government side or on the opposition side, to assure that the kind of tax which is being imposed now will be dropped by the provincial Treasurer.

It may mean, of course, that we are going to have many more floods of letters and many more editorials and comments. If that is the case, so much to the good, because that kind of aroused public opinion is the kind of thing which may finally bring this government to its senses.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, having watched the member for London North (Mr. Walker) pilot Bill 96 through committee, and now the member for London South (Mr. White) pilot this bill through second reading, I can't forbear an irrelevant comment, namely, that I thought when John Robarts left we had broken up that London cabal but heaven help us, it is emerging there once again.

However, I was interested in the comment of the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) in regard to this mythical conversation that went on between old John and old Bill. As a matter of fact there are some fascinating rumours around Queen's Park these days as to what went on in the government to produce such a fantastic political goof as they did. One of the rumours is—maybe there is more truth in it than fiction—that the government put the tax on energy as a red herring to distract public attention from what they thought was the real concern and where the real storm would be, namely, the increase in the sales tax.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): That is much too clever for them.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): A Machiavellian decoy.

Mr. MacDonald: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, what we have to take note of is that we have got rid of the energy tax, but we have still to deal with what the government in the first instance was most fearful of, namely, the 40 per cent hike in the sales tax.

I just want to say, lest there be any doubt in the mind of the provincial Treasurer, that we are opposed to this and we are going to fight it on every stage throughout. Indeed, what I want to do—

Mr. Givens: Filibuster.

Mr. MacDonald: Not filibuster. I don't think you achieve anything by filibustering. We will try to deal with it in a substantive way. What I want to do by way of a leadoff on behalf of the New Democratic caucus is to present the broad parameters of our opposition. My colleagues will be filling in and dealing with certain details.

The first point that I think is of very great significance is that the sales tax is a regressive tax. When you have heard all of the arguments that the provincial Treasurer and some of the other rationalists who are now in support of sales taxes have put forward, the simple answer is that the government itself concedes that the sales tax is regressive and, therefore, it is moving toward tax credits as a means of reducing that regressivity to some extent. So let's not get hung up on the proposition as to whether or not the tax is regressive. It is a regressive tax. That brings me to what to my mind is really completely ludicrous. This government has now become involved in an exercise in which it is raising money from the sales tax, the most regressive tax at the provincial level, in order to finance tax credits to reduce the burden of the property tax, which is the most regressive levy at the local level.

To call that whole exercise tax reform is really taxing one's credulity. Yet that is precisely the kind of beautiful little academic model that our provincial Treasurer is now obsessed with and introduced to the House. While part of it has been dismantled, let the public not be fooled for one moment. The main part of it is still there and he is proceeding with it. This tax was not needed. It wasn't needed and it wasn't necessary for two reasons.

The first one is that if the Treasurer was going to have tax reform and if he was going to raise revenue for purposes of tax credits that would counter the regressivity of taxes already in existence, then he had alternative areas to which he could have gone to raise money progressively. The Liberal spokesman made reference to the income tax and the corporation tax. Well, he illustrated it as another area to which you could go. I wasn't quite sure, as I listened to him, as to whether he was really recommending that, but certainly—

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, he said put up income taxes.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Why recommend it when the government doesn't need the money? It doesn't need it.

Hon. Mr. White: He is nodding his head. Put up the income taxes, the man said.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the Treasurer finished?

Mr. Foulds: Right on!

Mr. Breithaupt: Better look to mining taxes.

Mr. MacDonald: Has the Treasurer dribbled on to a stop, or is there more to come?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: More to come.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we have no doubt as to where our position is, and without going into detail, because I've already put it on the record in some detail for consideration of the House.

If the government had some sort of a commitment that it wasn't going to move into the income tax area, which the federal government had vacated in order to give something of a fillip to the economy at the present time, then fine, there are alternative sources. But this government steadfastly refuses to consider these alternative sources.

For example, it has reduced the succession duties until today we have only $59 million in revenue coming in from that source.

Mr. Martel: That is for the poor too!

Mr. MacDonald: As I detailed, the government could have anywhere from $115 million to $140 million from this source, and because it doesn't raise it there progressively in accordance with capacity to pay, it has no alternative but to raise it regressively—what the government is doing with the sales tax.

The second area of recourse is the whole vast area of resources, and particularly the mining industry. As I pointed out in my budget reply, if the government were to implement in the Province of Ontario the kind of proposals that Eric Kierans has suggested in the Province of Manitoba, it would have in the range of some $300 million.

Finally, in the capital gains tax, where this government—I can remember the provincial Treasurer's predecessor, Charlie MacNaughton, getting up and saying, "We raise taxes progressively. It's that group up in Ottawa that is always so regressive." And he cited the cutoff on the social security tax so it wouldn't go beyond $6,000. People earning $6,000 were paying as much of a social security tax as people earning $60,000.

Well, you know, there was a simple answer to it. If he really believed in a progressive tax structure, there was no reason why the Province of Ontario couldn't step in and pick up on the tax beyond the $6,000, and introduce an element of progressivity into it.

And so with the capital gains tax. If the federal government is going to approach the capital gains tax in such a mealy-mouthed way, it leaves this government with an area to move in and to pick up the half of the capital gains tax that the federal government hasn't got the intestinal fortitude to raise in a progressive fashion.

There are alternative sources where this government could raise revenue progressively and it could use that revenue when and if it was needed and in such quantity as it needed to provide services. And if you want to pursue this pet theme of the provincial Treasurer, of enriching the tax credit plan, then the government could use progressively raised revenue to reduce even more of the regressive features of the existing tax—the basic five per cent sales tax with which the province has been burdened for quite some time.

There's a second reason, however, and this has been alluded to a number of times. I want to come back to it because the provincial Treasurer tends to dismiss it. And that is the calculated miscalculations with which this government frames a budget insofar as its revenues are concerned.

It is one thing to say the government can't, with certainty, predict exactly what the revenue is going to be, but it is another thing to ignore the pattern of miscalculation over the year and to deliberately live with that miscalculation.

I have documented prior to this budget and during my budget reply, that pattern of error, that error in fiscal marksmanship over the last 10 years is 5.3 per cent which, with this year's budget, amounts to $364 million. It's not chicken feed.

Indeed last year, as the budget figures gave us the up-to-date information, the error wasn't 5.3 per cent, it was 50 per cent worse—it was 7.8 per cent. And 7.8 per cent will give the government an extra revenue of $535 million.

Now I am not going to take the time to detail that that $535 million itself may even be low. Because there are a lot of factors, excluding inflated prices to which this government has given the fillip, and therefore a seven per cent sales tax, calculated on the basis of all of these inflated prices, is going to bring in far more revenue, even compared with the kind of underestimate the government has indulged in before.

In view of that, you've got a range of anywhere from $364 million, on the basis of the 5.3 per cent error and underestimate over the last 10 years, up to $535 million on the basis of last year's error of 7.8 per cent. And with that money the government could have done what it needed to do, in terms of larger municipal grants, in terms of enriching the tax credit plan without raising the sales tax. Mr. Speaker, this is a point that I think is worth drawing out and focusing attention on. The government poses as the champion of tax equity, and yet its whole instrument for achieving that, the tax credit in this budget, was designed to do nothing but relieve the regressivity in the increase in the sales tax; only the 2 per cent increase.

In short, what the government was saying is that the regressivity of that basic five per cent, was going to be built, in perpetuity, into our tax structure and sore of forgotten about, to be lived with.

Well that's not good enough!

Mr. Foulds: Absolutely shameful!

Mr. MacDonald: Let me turn now to another area in which I think the sales tax is open to serious criticism. It is undermining the fiscal stance the government would like to believe it is taking in the Province of Ontario; or more appropriately it is undermining the kind of fiscal stance the government should be taking in view of economic conditions in this country.

What the government has done, because of whatever kind of commitment the provincial Treasurer had with the federal finance minister, is to avoid moving into the income tax field which was vacated by the federal budget; but instead they have extracted sales tax to the extent of $340 million a year. That's $340 million even after the energy portion of it has gone down the drain!

Well, Mr. Speaker, $340 million in a full year, taken out of the purchasing power of the people in the Province of Ontario is going to have a very definite stifling effect on any stimulus of the economy, which was the whole objective and presumably the whole purpose of the federal budget.

And by doing that, the provincial Treasurer has destroyed Ontario's credibility vis-à-vis the federal government in some of the traditional arguments that it has been making over the last four or five years.

The long-standing plea of the provincial Treasurer, and his two or three predecessors, was that Ottawa should be engaging in even more imaginative stimulus of the economy. Because we didn't have an adequate stimulation of the economy we have had high levels of unemployment and lower revenues coming in. Not only was every government in this country suffering lower revenues, but they had these intolerable high levels of unemployment.

Well, we got an agreement in January. The provincial Treasurer succeeded in getting the support of finance ministers, of provincial Treasurers, in that conference that was held in Ottawa, that Ottawa's posture up until now had not been sufficiently expansionary; that something more should be done about it.

And yet what does the government do? When the federal budget came down—because, it argues, speciously, the federal budget was inadequately expansionary—what the provincial Treasurer does is to step in and bolster that inadequacy, instead of support the efforts of the federal government, inadequate as he deems them to be, so that we would have a real stimulus of the economy and really get into clearing up the unemployment and providing the kind of real flow of revenues from which every provincial government would benefit. We have had the long-standing plea from this provincial government that Canada's fiscal policies have been characterized by what is described as a fiscal mismatch that the provincial policies weren't working in tandem, so to speak, with the federal policies. Yet after the Treasurer succeeded in Ottawa in getting unanimity and called upon the federal government for a more imaginative stimulus of the economy, he comes in with a budget that is a fiscal mismatch.

Instead of bolstering the position of the federal government, he takes a stance which in his own terms is fiscally neutral; in fact, it is likely a contractionary budget, because by the time all this money has come in, he is going to find that he will have a balanced budget unless, as the hon. member for Kitchener said, the Treasurer gets engaged in very heavy supplementary spending. A balanced budget or a surplus under the present conditions is not only misconceived, it is going to be a classic in fiscal mismatch.

Once again, what the Treasurer has done is to destroy his own credibility. He has destroyed his capacity to go in and argue with conviction with Ottawa in regard to the inadequacy of its stimulation of the economy and its lack of capacity to provide leadership in harmonizing fiscal policies all across the country.

Of course, just by way of a footnote to it all, what really emerged in January of this year in an informal way was something of a joint economic council to get some harmonization of fiscal policies in this year's budget. When the Treasurer got that agreement on the part of all of the provinces and when the federal government, now that it is so sensitive in its minority position, responded to the consensus of the provinces and came in with a more expansionary budget, what he had was a joint economic council, which he and his predecessors have been pleading for for years. It wasn't formally called as that, but in fact it was that. And what has he done? He has destroyed the credibility of a joint economic council because he, the champion of it for years, has now come back and brought in a budget which is a fiscal mismatch and is countering rather than bolstering the whole thrust of the federal budget.

Let me finally refer to another aspect of the whole policy that flows from this misguided approach to a sales tax, the withdrawing of $340 million from the purchasing power of the people, and therefore dampening down rather than stimulating the economy.

The provincial Treasurer in his budget speech was boasting for a moment that the unemployment rate in January or February was 4.2 per cent, that by March it had dropped to 4.1 per cent—but then he said the yearly average was going to be 4.4 per cent. Well, if the yearly average is going to be 4.4 per cent that means later this year our unemployment is going to climb up to 4.6, 4.7, 4.8 or 4.9 per cent to be able to get an average of 4.4 per cent. In short, Mr. Speaker, we are still going to be a great distance from that goal, to which this government at least is now paying lip-service, of no more than three per cent unemployed so that we can achieve so-called full employment.

The Treasurer's whole policies are pulling the rug out from that kind of a policy, because even with what he deemed to be an adequate expansionary thrust in the federal budget, he had an opportunity to bolster that and to create the kind of expansion in the Canadian economy which would have finally come to grips with this hard-core unemployment which has cursed us for the last four or five or six years, ever since an equally misconceived budget was brought in federally by Edgar Benson.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member find this a convenient time to break his remarks?

Mr. MacDonald: I will speak only about one minute more; I will finish and leave it at that, because my colleagues can pick up on it.

The final point I want to make is that the provincial Treasurer or some of his ghost-writers have a capacity for coming up with interesting new phrases. He says that all the province is now left with is the capacity of fiscal spurt. Isn't that lovely? A fiscal spurt capacity. The Treasurer has run these big deficits that Ottawa should have been bearing until now he has nothing but a spurt capacity left. Well, here comes the spurt. It is another misrepresentation of the situation.

Hon. Mr. White: I think I wrote spirit, actually.

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact this government is willing to spurt fantastically before elections and then it rationalizes a nonspurt in the other end of the election cycle. That is what the Treasurer is doing now.

I want to point out to the provincial Treasurer that the Smith committee said that until our debt levels go to nine per cent of the gross domestic product our debts were completely manageable. Okay. The deficits of the last two or three years brought us up to 6.9 per cent, and in 1973-1974 the official prediction of the Treasurer's own ministry is that it is going to be seven per cent.

Now seven per cent is still two per cent below that nine per cent level at which point we begin to get debts that are unmanageable. In other words, he has a capacity to deal with the problem. He is not reduced to spurts but this was a spurt budget. I was almost going to say it was brought in by something which rhymes with spurt, but I won't say that.

In short, this is a tax which is unnecessary. It is inequitable. We are opposed to it. We will fight it on second reading. We will fight it in every clause where it can be done meaningfully. We will oppose it then and we will oppose it on third reading because we don't need it.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): This budget is going to finish the government.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Why doesn't the Treasurer withdraw it and resign?

Mr. MacDonald: John "Walter Gordon" White.

Mr. Lewis: Retreating in steps, but retreating.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

RETAIL SALES TAX ACT (continued)

Mr. Speaker: When we rose at 6 o'clock I believe we were on second reading of Bill 98, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act. The member for York Centre.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, are we going to continue without the minister (Mr. White)?

An hon. member: Here he is.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, while we are waiting for the minister to take his place, I am pleased to bring to the attention of the House that a group of young Liberals from York Mills riding are in the gallery tonight to watch our debate.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): The member can do better than that!

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, after the supper hour most of us are in very good humour, and I would like to start off tonight by complimenting the Treasurer (Mr. White) on one feature of his bill, that he is at last recognizing that there should be a refund of sales tax on bad debts. Perhaps he would bring this matter to the attention of other collectors of sales tax, namely the federal government, that it is really unfair for any government to tax sales when actually the retailer himself has never collected the money and therefore is taking money out of his own till. It should not be collected from him.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. A. Jessiman (Fort William): Especially that 12 per cent on building products.

Mr. Deacon: I would like to compliment the Treasurer on that, Mr. Speaker. I also think that he has made a good point insofar as the bulk-sale transactions are concerned. It's reasonable, it shows that in these matters the Treasurer has some understanding of the problem faced by those who have bulk sales. They don't have the money right there at the moment and yet in the past they have had to put up their money before the transaction has gone through.

But this 40 per cent increase in the sales tax which we are now seeing put before us tonight is absolutely intolerable. It is made necessary only because of the waste with which this government has plagued this province over the last many years. For example, if one walks a few hundred yards from here to a library that comes under the name of the John P. Robarts Library—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): It's a great name.

Mr. Deacon: No question it's a great name. But, under the direction of the current Premier of this province (Mr. Davis), that library, which has cost far more than it originally was estimated to cost, is largely empty because it was, like many other buildings of the university, overbuilt. It was overbuilt because the university chose to follow the instructions of the government instead of the recommendations made over many years by the council of presidents that this government should not encourage building of vast new structures on our campuses because there would be a decline in the number of students after a period of years.

Yet this government has wasted these tax dollars, dollars that really cost the ordinary person a lot of the essentials of his life. Because of the waste of this government in universities we have this 40 per cent increase imposed upon us in this bill.

Look at the waste in Ontario Place—$14 million estimate, $27 million cost—built without any control whatsoever. That's just another example of the failure of this government to show any appreciation of the meaning of a dollar in their hands.

As another example, we are now expanding the space in Toronto for our burgeoning bureaucracy—for the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, for the Ministry of Education, for the Ministry of Natural Resources—to give them more office facilities. There is absolutely no reason why this space should be built and provided in the highest cost area in North America.

If this government had any comprehension whatsoever of its responsibility to the taxpayers and to improved efficiency, it would see that these ministries had no need to be located in Toronto but would be located in other cities and towns of this province. That would save in the order of 50 per cent of the money being allocated in this budget for maintenance as they call it—the provision of space for departments.

Mr. Jessiman: Move the National Arts Centre to Barrie for $50 million!

Mr. Deacon: Yes, I think moving a lot of these government facilities to towns other than those that are suffering from inflation of land prices, as we are in this area, would certainly make sense to the taxpayers; and they wouldn't have to face the 40 per cent increase in this budget.

Another example is the failure of this government to provide services and the financing to municipalities that would enable them to avoid costly negotiations with the government and enable them, as well as the government—

Hon. J. White (Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs): I think the member is speaking with a forked tongue.

Mr. Deacon: —to bring down costs that are far higher than necessary. This would happen if this government recognized that its job is to provide services to municipalities that they are not in a position to provide themselves, namely the wholesale provision of water services and sewage treatment. Instead of that, this government forces municipalities to enter into negotiations that are protracted over years and years and are absolutely unnecessary when it comes to actually raising the money for these facilities; and certainly they are not the most efficient means of getting them built.

North of Toronto, in the region of York, we have been waiting for years for a satisfactory means of handling the need for services of people who want to live in that area, but this government has stopped all sorts of development just because it has not used its own potential ability of providing services to the areas where there is need.

Then there's the cost of the bureaucracy that we've built up. In the 5½ years since I came into this House, we have seen an increase in civil servants from 45,000 to the figure of 70,000 today. That kind of an increase indicates the failure of this Treasurer and his colleagues to really study how government should serve the people of this province and give them value for their tax dollar.

We wouldn't be complaining about this 40 per cent increase today if it weren't for the waste; and perhaps I'm unfair in blaming the Treasurer for a lot of this waste, because from what I've seen in the past he's probably one who has given a lot of thought and has had some success in achieving more efficiency. But I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, he's had no success in persuading his colleagues to take a more careful look at a new thrust of the government to see that we don't have a bureaucracy dominating the people of this province and giving us no value for our tax dollar.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: His waist has always been a problem anyway.

Mr. Deacon: In the region of York about $10 million has been paid out over the last three years of regional government there; and yet surveys of the people in that area showed absolutely no appreciation of any improvement in service, because there hasn't been any improvement in service. It's just been $10 million used by this government to try to bribe the people into accepting a form of government that dominates local government in this province more effectively. Insofar as this 40 per cent increase is concerned there's no question that the increase is required because of the waste, the extravagance, the failure to provide efficient good government for the people.

I want the minister to give me an idea, in his remarks, of what has been the experience in Indiana with regard to the elimination of sales tax inequity. In that state, as I recall, they had a sales tax credit system in effect. I know that at the time the select committee studied the matter four or five years ago or whenever it was, we found that the inequity of the sales tax could be alleviated to some extent by means of the sales tax credit system.

It also had many difficulties in connection with it, such as a long delay in getting the credits and therefore people were having to put out money before they got the refund back. They were people who were in the poorest position to benefit from it.

I notice that the minister did take some cognizance of the sales tax credit idea with this initial gesture in this bill—not in this bill but providing it in the budget—

Hon. Mr. White: And in this bill.

Mr. Deacon: I guess it is in the bill, too. Basically, there's great inequity in the sales tax and certainly it is one that isn't nearly as fair as the income tax if we do have to go for additional sources of revenue.

I note that one of the points raised by the select committee was that the proportion of income spent on services tends to rise with income, and the inclusion of services in the tax base would therefore make the burden of tax more progressive. I wonder why it was that the minister ignored that and yet attempted to bring in a tax on an essential part—

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): That's a good point, a very good point.

Mr. Deacon: —of our way of life, that is, our need for energy. Imagine the minister thinking that energy was any different from food, a basic essential to life, and trying to impose that tax.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He was going to tax that at one time.

Mr. Deacon: That's right.

Hon. Mr. White: Until the opposition members chickened out.

Mr. Deacon: He would have done that if he could have. Yet he's ignored that field which was studied by the select committee pointing out that services, if there is going to be an increase, should be one way of broadening the base and getting increased revenues.

As a matter of fact, if he was going to go after energy at all, a very popular form of energy tax, in my view, would have been one that, in effect, taxed wasted energy. For example, on automobiles powered with 450 hp engines and putting a very high tax on vehicles larger than what was considered necessary for a smaller car or a medium sized car. In this day and age when we don't want to waste energy, if he had introduced an energy tax that would have discouraged the waste of energy, it would have been one that, I think, would have been quite acceptable.

We see lights left on in buildings at all hours of the night with some sort of pretext that it saves money if one leaves them on instead of shutting them off; it is supposed to be more efficient. We all know that's a lot of nonsense. We all know that this past programme of Hydro to sell more power at all costs is not the programme we should be following today.

We know that energy is going to be an increasingly scarce commodity. We should be doing everything possible to bring in legislation or taxes which will encourage people to be much more careful of our energy resources and not waste them so they will not be available for future generations. This minister seems to have ignored those two possible areas of useful tax changes, I think.

One is recognizing that services are perhaps the most equitable area of sales tax, because those who have more of this world's goods tend to use more services than those who don't have them. They do their own work. Second, excess energy is something of which the public as a whole is becoming very aware. We must not abuse and we must not waste in the future. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, this Treasurer has been playing tiddlywinks with the taxpayers when he brings in such exemptions as seeds, bulbs, flowers—cut and potted—shrubs, trees, plants, birds, fish and other household pets.

He treats this whole matter of sales tax as a joke. It is no joke to the taxpayer. There is the failure of the Treasurer to be consistent. For example, in connection with the whole area of sales tax it has been agreed that there should be exemption when it comes to purchases of machinery, equipment and other goods—that's in the Retail Sales Tax Act. Anything that has to do with producing goods should be exempt. We don't want to make it more difficult and more costly to manufacture things. Yet, for example, the revenue men from his department recently collected some $700 from a local grower—a greenhouse operator—who had bought his irrigation equipment considering it to be for agricultural purposes. He was growing tomatoes. He had radiator coils and fans and everything put in. When they saw that he had changed over from tomatoes to flowers, they then banded a $700 tax on the cost of that equipment.

It's completely inconsistent for his department or his legislation to differentiate between production when it has to do with tomatoes and production when it has to do with flowers, particularly now that the Treasurer has decided that flowers aren't even subject to retail sales tax.

These producers of flowers aren't worrying about the sales tax on the retail end. They are concerned about the cost of production, because they want to be competitive in their production costs with those outside this province as well as within the province. We want them to be that way and I'm sure the Treasurer does. But he has failed in his review of the whole tax source picture to recognize the inconsistencies he now has.

I ask the Treasurer to look into that matter. There is absolutely no reason for him to exempt production machinery on one side of the piece and yet when it comes to those who are in the manufacturing of goods, who are going to be exempt now from retail sales tax, he taxes the production machinery that they require for the production of those flowers and shrubs and trees and the rest of it.

Mr. Speaker, these are the main points I wanted to bring to the Treasurer's attention. I think he should be consistent. It's been said of one man I know that he's the most even-tempered man I've ever met; he's always mad.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Who?

Mr. Deacon: I don't think we can say that of the Treasurer. We can think of another person.

Mr. Lewis: He's most inflammatory.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He's always mad.

Mr. Deacon: The one thing that we do say about him is the only consistent thing about this Treasurer we have, Mr. Speaker, is his inconsistency. He's always inconsistent. He should know better.

There are two or three improvements that I mentioned he has brought in in this legislation, but he's been inconsistent in the use of an inequitable form of tax to pay for the unconscionable ways of the government of this province.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore.

Hon. Mr. White: That was a withering attack!

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Withered.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Well, wither now.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Whither Ontario?

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): John, oh, John. When is he ever going to learn?

Mr. Renwick: One of the Treasurer's best friends, if not his only one.

Mr. Lawlor: If ever a man had been flayed and burned in the unsacred fires and would have learned the basic lesson—

Mr. Lewis: Without benefit of purging!

Mr. Lawlor: —which I learned only too well, when we sat so congenially on that committee throughout that unimaginable zero summer.

Mr. Breithaupt: Summer of 1968.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Rising star.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We will never recover from it.

Mr. Lawlor: It was rock-bottom. I won't mention what we did after the sittings were over in the evening because that would be reserved—

Mr. Renwick: But the member paid tax on it, whatever it was.

Mr. Lawlor: We've been paying ever since!

Mr. Breithaupt: Not alone.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: If it was overnight the member would snore, I'll tell him that.

Mr. Lawlor: The thing I wanted to mention to members, do they remember that we were fallacious and foolish enough to just whisper above the heads of the multitude that we might tax churches? Do they remember that? And do they remember how we reduced it so that it was a pinprick on the horizon with hardly any tax at all? And do members remember the holocaust that greeted us? I'll never forget it. I think Mr. Pilkey probably lost his seat over it.

Mr. Breithaupt: And the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith) was burned in effigy.

Mr. Lawlor: The Treasurer was lucky to keep his seat. However, there aren't that many churches in London. They don't pray that often.

After that particular experience I thought the man's impregnable and he wouldn't make any stupid moves; he wouldn't go overboard. He had learned his lesson that there are certain things which are so sacred that they simply can't be taxed; for instance, transfers on the stock exchange. This minister goes from, on one side, the pathetic to the pathetic. The Treasurer, on the pathetic side, is subject, as Ruskin would say, to the pathetic fallacy. Oh, with rigour!

Mr. Lewis: Mortis.

Mr. Foulds: Rigor mortis.

Mr. Lawlor: A strange man indeed. There are certain things sacred for him, you know. The business, for instance, of household pets—goldfish can't be taxed by the Treasurer; or Amazonian piranha, those tender gentle creatures; or imported jaguars from Peru. There is no tax on such creatures. That would be putting household pets under surveillance. Then there is his solicitude, his deep feeling for growing things; everything except human beings falls into the category.

Mr. Good: I wonder if he owns a Christmas tree?

Mr. Lawlor: The tax comes off, the alleviation takes place.

Mr. Good: Does the Treasurer own a Christmas tree farm?

Mr. Lawlor: In another area on the committee this particular passion showed—books. The Treasurer is such a literate creature; books are so precious to him; his literary soul resonates so much with Leo Tolstoy's that he wouldn't permit even the thought or discussion of the taxation of books. Even Playboy was too sacred an object to be taxed.

Mr. Lewis: What does the member mean "even?"

Mr. Breithaupt: What about Penthouse?

Mr. Foulds: That's the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells).

Mr. Lawlor: And so we came out with the recommendation for a tax on what we called, in quotes, "literature."

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The member is using that term loosely.

Mr. Lawlor: I would think that 99 per cent of the stuff, including "Xavieral", our friend's friend, might be subject to a very considerable tax. I recommend 25 per cent.

The Treasurer may extract a few of the books—certain religious literature, which nobody reads any more anyhow, and the odd book on philosophy and put them on an exempt list.

Mr. Lewis: "Don Quixote."

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, "Don Quixote." But for the rest, this is pure sentimentality on the part of the Treasurer. He is full of oozing sentiments about things that don't really come down to earth, but when it comes to raising the five per cent tax to a seven per cent tax upon the lowest income brackets—the tax already being explicitly acknowledged by all authorities, all the boys who know anything about this—and he knows who they are; Maslove and John Dew and Musgrave, all the men that he likes to quote when he's in the smoker car.

Hon. Mr. White: Musgrave? He is not with John Dew. No, he is not.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I could produce texts by Musgrave, that tax is regressive, always has been; and where do you get—

Hon. Mr. White: Musgrave is better than John Dew.

Mr. Lawlor: John Dew is—I'll read the Treasurer John Dew in a few minutes just to refresh his—

Hon. Mr. White: My experts are better than the member's experts.

Mr. Lawlor: —laggard memory on this subject.

Mr. Foulds: We know what happened to Sergeant Musgrave.

Mr. Lawlor: There is no question about its regressiveness. And don't quote Smith at me because Smith's idea is based on a flat-rate proportion of income. He says it is proportional over various classes in the tax. He doesn't deny, though, that it is regressive with respect to the lowest brackets of that tax, taking the actual income and the percentage of income derivable therefrom for people under, say, $5,000. Has the Treasurer seen the figures?

Has he seen the figures, for instance, in Maslove's recent book, which says that in this province, and this is Ontario alone, with respect to personal income tax, people making under $2,000 pay the federal government $5 million and the provincial, $1.5 million. When it gets down to the sales tax, they pay the federal government $26 million and the provincial, $18,200,000. This is people with under $2,000 a year income.

One can follow the figures right through those tables and he will find where the weight really falls. I was reading figures the other day that appalled me and astonished me.

He prates; he prates, you know—the Treasurer and Benson and others. And now the Treasurer is in the same kind of seat which

I hope is sufficiently hot that it incubates for him.

Mr. Breithaupt: Procrustean bed.

Mr. Lawlor: Eighty-three per cent of all taxes are paid, in my opinion, by people making less than $10,000.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, every one of those would benefit from this budget.

Mr. Lewis: Nonsense.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): It is the privilege of paying one's taxes, is that right?

Mr. Lewis: That is part of the Tory mythology. That is the Treasurer's old credit sleight of hand.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Pay a lot and get a little bit back.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, my friend John—

Mr. Lewis: We mourn his passing.

Mr. Lawlor: —the Treasurer knows as well as I do that the equity in a system depends on the mix, not upon where you lay any particular tax, but upon the total picture of all those taxes. I just want to remind him of what Carter had to say. At 11 of volume 1 and again at 245, he says:

In the light of these criteria we believe that the present tax system is inequitable in many important respects. The combined effect of sales taxes, corporate income taxes, property taxes, and the present personal income tax rates and base, is such that low-income individuals and families pay higher taxes than is equitable when compared to middle- and upper-income individuals and families.

That was the beginning of the great revolution that never took place. There was no Bastille; there was only a bunch of bastards who stood against the cause. And the Treasurer's party was one of them—

Hon. Mr. White: As the member is now. Shamefull

Mr. Lawlor: —and it did more to undermine the pretensions and the various proposals put forward to make equity in the tax system, than any other single cause in this country because it carries more weight financially. It was Charlie MacNaughton and the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) at the end of the row who were the responsible people.

Can anybody lambaste you under this particular head and just alter you one iota in the direction of human decency, which you talk about all the time and which this budget doesn't contain? This particular tax falls very far short indeed.

We'll come to it—don't animadvert to me about the business of tax credits—we'll talk about tax credits in 2½ minutes.

Mr. J. A. Taylor (Prince Edward-Lennox) We'll time the member.

Mr. Lawlor: Carter sets up the figures and illustrates it, to show that the total tax structure is regressive over the first three income classes up to income levels of $4,000. I won't go on because he gives them all the way along. The federal tax structure is slightly regressive over the first two brackets. The general sales tax, selective excise and import levies all exhibit regressiveness over the first two brackets—an erratic pattern that is neither clearly progressive nor regressive from an income level of $3,000, to $10,000, and regressive beyond $10,000.

The evidence seems to suggest, therefore, that while taxes on consumption are regressive over the lower and upper income brackets, there is no clear pattern of regressiveness or progressiveness over the middle income situation.

The minister tends, through you, Mr. Speaker, to use weasel words and to play with the language. I suppose that's why he is so fond of books and unwilling to tax them. They offer such a plenitude of masquerades for him to indulge himself with. In his budget statement—when he tried, as usual, to pull the wool over the eyes of this assembly—he said—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The proverbial sweater.

Mr. Lawlor: The Treasurer says at page 27, based on the last paragraph at the middle of that page:

The total value of the retail sales tax credit is estimated to amount to approximately $90 million per year compared to total tax increases of $50 million from energy used for residential heating and lighting. Thus the new sales tax credit will offset the energy tax and the increased sales tax burden on half or more of our families. Budget paper B illustrates it.

And that has to be, by the way, Mr. Speaker, completely revised. I would ask the minister if it is possible, and I think it just may be, before this debate is over—because it is not going to be over in a great hurry—to produce to us amended tables. Obviously the first tables have been discountenanced and pulled out under pressure.

And that surprised me about the Treasurer; I thought he had greater indocility than that—presumption, straight gall. I thought he would stand up to it; but no, no he wilted. Friday afternoon he was out doing his lawn and laying around and holding to the barricades, but by Tuesday morning the avalanche had set in and he caved under. That was a terrible disappointment for a man of his parts, I contend.

Mr. Stokes: Flexibility.

Mr. Lawlor: It wasn't flexibility in that particular case; it was an offhanded nonchalance. After all, what is $100 million, eh John?

Mr. Lewis: He knew he had it anyway.

Mr. Lawlor: This business—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I remind the hon. member that he is not supposed to be addressing the minister by his personal name.

Mr. Lewis: Well, that is a more courteous designation for that member than others.

Mr. Taylor: Not in the connotation that he is using.

Mr. Lewis: Oh come now!

Mr. Lawlor: I know the Treasurer a lot better than the member for Prince Edward-Lennox. I even know his strengths; all the member knows is his weaknesses.

Interjections by hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: The Treasurer has the effrontery on page 1 of his budget to use the same language again. He says:

I would therefore ask the Legislature to increase certain provincial taxes substantially, permitting offsetting decreases in property taxes and permitting significant increases in tax credits as this mechanism evolves toward [Shades of Charles Darwin] a meaningful guaranteed annual income plan.

Two things are wrong with that. First of all, the Treasurer is offsetting. We will delay on that for a moment.

The second thing is the evolution that he is talking about. Is the Treasurer in any concert with, or does he have any ongoing conversation with the Minister of Community and Social Services of this government (Mr. Brunelle)? He is up in Ottawa at the present instant I suspect and he has disowned—has publicly stated that he is no longer interested in—guaranteed annual incomes.

Hon. Mr. White: No, that is not correct.

Mr. Lewis: It was clearcut last night—absolutely clear—he wants nothing to do with it.

Hon. Mr. White: No, that is not correct. In fact, the minister has overall responsibility in the various ministerial presentations.

Mr. Renwick: Oh, is the Treasurer disowning him?

Mr. Lewis: Well, the Treasurer had better speak to him about it.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! The member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Don't worry; he is holding it.

An hon. member: And doing a pretty good job, too!

Hon. Mr. White: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Lawlor: The point about it is the word "offset," which is a euphemism that hides the real meaning. Mr. Treasurer, there are no offsets. There is a small offset, but the Treasurer announced it on the radio and elsewhere and he tended to mislead—and I think he even misled himself, so convinced is he of his own virtue in this particular regard—as to what the impact and effect of those credits are.

The simple way to put it to him, Mr. Speaker, is to say that he will tax somebody, for example, an extra $72 for the year, and he will turn around and will give them a tax credit which will be for $32. And he has the consummate lack of integrity to forget about the $40 in between. So somebody is out $72. But the Treasurer is saying to the world at large, "Oh, he has a tax credit," with the implication that the taxpayer is right back at the starting point.

Mr. Lewis: That's right. That's right.

Mr. Lawlor: As a matter of fact, he does it so well and so unctuously that sometimes one thinks he might be in a buck or two if that's what he means by negative income tax.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Watch it now!

Mr. Lawlor: But that's not the way it works. The guy who is making $75 a week is out $4 or $5 that week. That's the way it is.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Mr. Lawlor: The Treasurer is going to come along at the end of the year and hand him back $15, $16, $28 or whatever it is. This is the full recompense for his devotion! This is what he calls a tax credit! We in the committee went along with the tax credit concept—

Hon. Mr. White: And the property tax.

Mr. Lawlor: —because the tax credit concept has validity. But the tax credit only has validity in context; the tax credit must be proportionate too. I suggest that in low income ranges it should be 100 per cent, or very close thereto, proportionate to the amount of the outlay of people in those low-income brackets; and it must be graduated up the scale. The Treasurer is not doing that. The gap between the two weighs much too heavily for him to prate about equity, about alleviating burdens, about making this wretched system fairer. It hasn't come to pass. The Treasurer is making it worse.

The burden on the individual taxpayer in the lower-income brackets grows immeasurably worse. His $40 is worth $1,000 to a wealthy man. He's under the same duress and the same responsibility with respect to his family, and this the Treasurer chooses to ignore. He does not pay any attention to this; he sloughs it off and speaks on all occasions in public as though the person who happens to be sitting opposite him is a total dunce. He overrides them with his superior intelligence, if that's what it is. What a browbeater he is! They all shrink before him. He comes on like Genghis Khan, and they haven't got a chance—the steamroller's over them—except the next morning he cancels all the taxes.

I wish the Treasurer would take that into consideration. We must lift our scale. We must give greater tax credits if we're going to be equitable with respect to whole ranges of lower-income people.

Hon. Mr. White: We are doing that.

Mr. Lawlor: If we don't do that, then we're only compounding the mischief; and to pretend otherwise would be a complete misnomer.

I want to read a word or two about this tax credit and the negative income tax. Prof. Douglas Hartle of the University of Toronto Institute for Quantitative Analysis of Social and Economic Policy summed up the tax credit position in relation to negative income tax succinctly in the Star—

Hon. Mr. White: Who? Who was that again?

Mr. Lawlor: Prof. Hartle. He wrote: "The negative income tax can be highly progressive or highly regressive, depending on the size of the credit. The right wingers"—I don't know where the Treasurer places himself these days—

Mr. Renwick: Slightly to the right of Genghis Khan.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Who's he?

Mr. Lawlor: Looking forward to retirement, I suspect, he considers himself above the fray; he's in no wing.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He is budgetarily neutral.

Mr. Lawlor: He is virtually wingless.

An hon. member: A political eunuch?

Hon. Mr. White: Let's get back to Freedman and Musgrave.

Mr. Lawlor: To continue: "The right wingers think of it as a way to get rid of every government welfare scheme by giving the poor a cash payment, while the left wingers see it as a means of transferring wealth from the rich to the poor."

Where does the Treasurer see it? Just where does it come in on his scheme of the universe?

Mr. Lewis: As a political device. That's where.

Mr. Lawlor: He, without any wings at all, is floating up in his own ozone—

Mr. Taylor: That's pretty heady stuff.

Mr. Lawlor: It is heady stuff. It would give an ordinary man delirium tremens, but the Treasurer only shakes a little now and then.

Mr. Lewis: Not to mention dementia praecox!

Mr. Lawlor: Those are the basic remarks I want to make on this particular measure. We can go into it with a nicety and a delicacy that this magnificent piece of legislation is worthy of, when we come to clause-by-clause, period-by-period, comma-by-comma, phrase-by-phrase, asterisk-by-asterisk consideration in a few days. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. White: The hon. member has sold out to the moguls of the UAW and they are getting their Cadillacs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, the aspects of this bill—

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order. Could the member take a seat for a moment? We didn't properly appreciate our colleague's speech.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Neither did the minister.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member for Lakeshore will sleep better tonight now!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Good: Thank you for the round of applause! Mr. Speaker, the aspects of this bill to which I would like to speak are quite personal, and I would speak of something else until the Treasurer gets back.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Tell us an Eddie Sargent joke.

Mr. Good: We all appreciate the fact that perhaps nothing has created more furore, both in and outside the Legislature, than this particular bill. I think when it was first announced during the budget, no one realized the acute implications and the effect that this taxation measure would have on each person in the province.

The Treasurer is asking for a 40 per cent increase in the retail sales tax, from five to seven per cent, which will net him an additional $360 million in retail sales tax revenue. This is not the total revenue; this is an increase in revenue. On top of that, this bill is asking for a tax on energy which would net the province this year $65 million, and in succeeding years, $100 million.

We have to talk about this because this is still in the bill, although the Premier (Mr. Davis) made his announcement that that part would be withdrawn. However, the bill before us tonight includes the seven per cent tax on energy. When we look at the budget paper dealing with the source of income of the Province of Ontario, it is almost unbelievable that the Treasurer, in his wisdom, has seen fit to derive as much money from retail sales tax—that is, 19 per cent of the provincial revenue—as he is deriving from personal income tax. The Treasurer is thereby saying that retail sales tax is as fair a form of taxation as is personal income tax.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It's unfair.

Mr. Good: This is absolutely unacceptable. I am very greatly surprised that the Treasurer, who has had some experience with the Smith committee, having been chairman of a select committee studying it and the whole method of taxation and equity in taxation, would try to put upon the people of Ontario a budget which would derive as much income from retail sales tax as it would from personal income tax.

I don't care how wealthy a man is, how much income he has, what his political leanings are, or what his political philosophy is. I am sure that everyone will agree when it comes right down to it, deep inside, that personal income tax and income tax on corporations is still the fairest form of taxation. Our Treasurer is trying to tell us that retail sales tax is just as fair a form of taxation as is personal income tax. There isn't anyone who can buy this type of argument.

Every once in a while I get invited to a party where I may be out of my realm. You know, there are some wealthy people around; they back me into a corner, and they say, "Look, Good, you've got to do something about this terrible tax that we're bearing. We're the ones who are creating all the growth in the economy and the government is taxing us to death." I usually say, "Yes, yes, I know, we have to do something for these depressed areas and these people."

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Really whitewashing.

Mr. Good: And I end up by saying, "You know, really, if you come right down to it, you do believe, deep inside somewhere, that if you are paying the tax you must be making the money."

But that is not so with retail sales tax. It's not similar to income tax at all. People who are paying the large portions of income tax are doing so because they are making a large amount of money. It's as simple as that. But our Treasurer is trying to make us believe that the people who have to buy products and buy essentials, are to be expected to pay as much into the provincial coffers in the form of taxation as is derived from all forms of income tax. I think that this in the first instance designates a very, very great lack of understanding on the part of the provincial Treasurer of what fairness and equity in taxation are all about.

With respect to this increase, it just has to be unconscionable that he would, first of all, increase the retail sales tax by 4 per cent in one year, and then add the energy tax besides. This to me offends all the guidelines and the controls suggested for and placed on the inflationary spiral which has taken us to a great height in our whole price and wage spiral.

I think that the government, when it adds this 40 per cent increase to the sales tax, must accept the responsibility for the increase in prices that will result from it, the increased demands for wages which will result from it, and the lack of money which people will have for spending. The disposable income will not buy as much because of the increase in the sales tax. The income which people would have had as a result of the reduction in federal income tax will not be there to purchase as much goods and commodities because of the increase in the sales tax. So the minister has personally to accept the responsibility for creating and causing increases in the inflationary spiral which has been one of the problems of our nation and our province in the last number of years.

The energy tax itself was supposed to have raised $65 million this year and $100 million next year and each succeeding year. We now have had a promise that it will be withdrawn. It is interesting to note how many people and how many organizations were so vehemently opposed to this energy tax. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture noted that it was greatly opposed to it. The unions spoke out against it. The Ontario Municipal—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: What did the federation say about the tax reduction to the farmers?

Mr. Good: That is not in this bill. If the minister wants to talk about what's happening to the farmers, they are quite concerned about the two cents on the gallon that they are going to be charged by this budget on their gasoline and fuel.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, they are not.

Mr. Good: Yes, they are, two cents per gallon. They are quite concerned about that.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Why should they pay any tax on that any more than any other industrial firm pays tax on it?

Mr. Good: The farmers are the one class of people who are in the production of food who are going to be taxed even after the Treasurer withdraws his energy tax.

Getting back to what I was saying, under the pressure—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They are not being taxed. Did the member not listen to the Treasurer? Why doesn't he speak to the farm people in Waterloo North? There has never been a budget brought down in the history of the province that did as much for the farmers.

Mr. Good: All right. Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting to notice that the Ontario Municipal Electric Association was very much opposed to the tax on energy. I have sometimes been critical of the OMEA, because I always felt that it was too much in the hip pocket of Ontario Hydro and whatever Ontario Hydro did the OMEA was not that much concerned about it. They just passed their increases in hydro on to the consumers without ever displaying any public objection to increases in hydro. This time the OMEA did come out and say the government had gone too far.

In the face of all this pressure, including the school boards and hospital boards, we have now had a promise that the tax on energy will be eliminated. Through all of this, the Treasurer wanted to raise as much in—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: None of the member's own party can stand to listen to that.

Mr. Good: If the minister wants to speak on the bill, he is as free to speak on it as I am.

Mr. Deacon: I only hope the minister has a little more common sense than what he has shown in saying what he has said right now.

Mr. Good: In spite of the Treasurer's wish to raise as much money by retail sales tax as he does by personal income tax, he seems to hang his whole case on the fact that there is going to be a sales tax credit. It is sheer, utter nonsense that the right people are going to benefit from the retail sales tax credit in proportion to the amount of tax they have paid.

First of all, the retail sales tax credit is geared to something which has absolutely no relationship to the two things which it should relate to—either the ability to pay, which has got to be the prime basis of taxation for the general budget of the province, or the amount of retail sales tax paid.

The Treasurer happened to choose personal income tax exemption on which to base the retail sales tax credit. I ask him, Mr. Speaker: Where is there any relationship between the personal income tax exemption and one's ability to pay—and taxes have got to be related in one sense to ability to pay or service rendered—or secondly, where is there any relationship between personal income tax exemption and the amount of retail sales tax paid? It is simple to see that there is no relationship.

The Treasurer pulled out of the air a method whereby he could install another tax credit and abuse the word, because it has no relationship to the amount of credit that has been paid, and there is no way in which you can figure the amount—other than that we know people in the middle and lower income bracket are generally going to have to buy more goods and services than those in upper brackets in proportion to the amount of income.

Getting to the final point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, it is simply this.

Mr. Speaker, could we have a quorum before I proceed?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Two cabinet members. Where are all these Tories concerned over the sales tax increase?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member feel there is not a quorum?

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe it is my responsibility to determine whether or not there is a quorum in the House.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to differ with the hon. member. It is not the responsibility of the Speaker to do so. If it is brought to my attention that there is not a quorum then I will cause the bells to ring. Is there not a quorum?

Mr. Good: I have asked whether there is a quorum. At the time I asked there was not a quorum. Is there now?

Mr. Taylor: Continue.

Hon. Mr. White: If the member continues there may not be.

Mr. Good: No, Mr. Speaker, there is not a quorum.

Mr. Speaker ordered that the bells be rung for four minutes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Good: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It is apparent and admitted by government members that the confidentiality of the budget is most important. To accomplish this, I am told on good authority that the Premier and the Treasurer are the only members of government, other than the immediate advisers, who know what is going to be in the budget.

This is borne out and has been made quite apparent by the fact that the Minister of Education and the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter) had not done any predetermination on what effect the energy tax would have on school costs. This brings us to the conclusion that the Treasurer and the Premier themselves must take utter and full responsibility for wishing, at the time of the budget release, to impose the seven per cent tax.

Hon. Mr. White: Speed it up! The member is losing all his audience.

Mr. Good: Just listen to what I have to say, because I feel it's very important.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Good: And the people of Ontario feel it's very important.

Mr. Deacon: All those things the Treasurer learned a few years ago he seems to have forgotten.

Mr. Good: All right! So the minister and the Premier must take full and ultimate responsibility for the fact a seven per cent tax on energy was brought into the budget. Then we find there has been such a bad error in judgement on the part of the provincial Treasurer that less than a week after he brings down his budget he must completely alter his direction, rescind it and say they will not introduce the tax.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is known as flexibility.

Mr. Good: When this happens Mr. Speaker, the bad judgement of the Treasurer and the Premier not only bring into question the credibility, but in my view they bring into question the integrity of the Treasurer. Not his personal honesty, let me hasten to add: no one is questioning his personal honesty. But I am questioning, Mr. Speaker, very much, the Premier's and the Treasurer's integrity as to filling those positions. No longer can the people of Ontario trust the Treasurer to make adequate and proper decisions.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Why doesn't the member tell us what Turner did to the cattlemen of Canada? What about his integrity? Why doesn't the member tell them all about that?

Mr. Good: Trust is associated with integrity, so consequently as an hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, I feel the Treasurer has no alternative but to resign as Treasurer of the Province of Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Good: Now, in all seriousness, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Why doesn't the member tell why the feds took off the duty on cattle? Take off the duty on beef! Why doesn't the member tell them what Turner did?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Turner lowered the taxes!

Mr. Good:—an error in judgement of that magnitude renders his service to the Province of Ontario questionable, and as an hon. gentleman he should resign.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-view.

Hon. Mr. White: Now the Liberals can leave again; it's okay, away they go!

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Treasurer no doubt is still wondering just what happened to him over this past week. I'm not sure he's recovered his poise completely. He is able to smile, that's a good sign, but behind that smile we're not just sure what exists.

Mr. Martel: It is called a lost weekend.

An hon. member: It's future shock, phase three!

Mr. Young: Yes, future shock; that is right.

Just what happened, I suppose we'll never know entirely, Mr. Speaker. Certainly what the hon. member who just spoke said is true. Obviously only about two men were in on these decisions, although I'm not absolutely certain of that.

Certainly the Premier and the Treasurer were in there. And the strange thing is that the Premier had the unmitigated gall to stand up in this place and say: "I am asking the Treasurer to review this decision," as if he had had nothing to do with it.

Now that's too much. Certainly the Premier of this province must have known; that's his job, to know these things.

Mr. Martel: "Billy the Kid."

Mr. Young: Now whether others were in on it or not we don't know. We certainly saw that the Minister of Health and the Minister of Education were shocked almost speechless. I find it difficult to believe the Minister of Agriculture and Food was in on this, although members know he was able to get some real concessions for his people.

Mr. Renwick: Of course he would be, because they got off scot free.

Mr. Young: So it looked as if there may have been some real bargaining there before the decision was made; we have a real horse trader in the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

But the question in my mind is if he was so concerned about his own people on the farms, why wasn't he just as concerned with the other people in the cities or in the villages across this province?

Mr. Renwick: They're buying the food!

Mr. Young: Certainly the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) was not in on this decision at all, because—he shakes his head and verifies that.

Mr. Renwick: I mean after all he is in the fuel oil business.

Mr. Young: Yes; close as he is to the working people of this province, he would have hit the roof if he had known.

Mr. Renwick: What percentage of the vote did the minister get again?

Mr. Young: As a matter of fact, I watched him during the announcement and certainly he was one of those who reacted violently when the decision was made, or when the announcement was made rather, that we were going to have not only the energy tax but the increase of 40 per cent on the sales tax.

Mr. Martel: That's going to hit the Cornwall area rather hard!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: Also, there is no question, certainly, the minister from Scarborough (Mrs. Birch) was not in on this decision, because she knows how the housewives would have taken this, and right in cabinet she would have raised an objection par excellence to this whole concept, so we exonerate her.

That leaves us with only two or three.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): What about the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett)?

Mr. Young: Certainly the member from Ottawa didn't know, because he burst forth in rhetoric in the newspapers within a day or two, lambasting the Treasurer and saying what he was going to do about this whole operation.

Mr. Breithaupt: So did transport!

Mr. Young: So did transport; and we had a lot of revolt in the lines.

Mr. Renwick: And the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes)?

Mr. Young: And the member for Sault Ste. Marie! All of these! It was very obvious—

Mr. Renwick: He was right in there; and the whip, the whip is yawning up in the corner now.

Mr. Young: Yes; and as far as the rump was concerned, back here we saw wild revolution!

Mr. Martel: They all voted for the bill.

Mr. Young: When I came into the parking lot last Tuesday morning, about 9:30 last Tuesday morning—I had heard that there was going to be something happening that day, the newspapers were reporting it—for the first time in the 10 years I've been in this House I couldn't find a parking spot around the whole perimeter of this building. Every Tory was in here expecting a caucus meeting.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Solidarity, that is what it is.

Mr. Young: But what happened? They sat and they twiddled their thumbs.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: And they waited. And they said, "What's happening?"

Interjections by hon. members:

Mr. Young: Yes, the rump simply sat there and waited obediently to know what was going to happen.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: But while they waited, they talked.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: The member for York West (Mr. MacBeth) was really going to speak his mind in caucus.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please! Maybe the hon. member will get back to the principle of this bill.

Mr. Young: The more they talked the more the revolution grew.

Mr. Lewis: That's right. There were 76 spokesmen that weekend—76 different spokesmen.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not speaking to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I must lay a bit of background for this bit of wisdom I'm going to give. That day a decision was made. A decision finally was made at the cabinet level that the energy tax had to go because of the revolution among the rump and other members.

Mr. McIlveen: It wasn't that. We got a free meal.

Mr. Young: They got a free meal. All right. Well, we know now.

An hon. member: That was the member's participation.

Mr. Cassidy: No, they got $4; is that right?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. G. Nixon) said it was cheese and crackers and it was good.

Mr. Young: The Premier came into the caucus room and the boys were all waiting with great expectations.

An hon. member: And waiting for orders.

Mr. Lewis: At 1:15.

Mr. Young: At 1:15.

Mr. Lewis: They wouldn't let them in too soon. The House opens at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Young: Just time to say to them, "Boys, you win; we are going to withdraw. We have decided that the Treasurer is going to eat humble pie. The Premier will make the announcement and say what great confidence we have in him. We're going to withdraw the energy tax. But boys, remember this—"

Mr. Renwick: And the Premier is here showing his confidence tonight.

Mr. Young: “—you’ll pound the table in absolute confidence in the Treasurer, yes, but more than that—”

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: If the man of the cloth says hell freezes over, hell freezes over.

Mr. Young: “—in return for knuckling under and abolishing the energy tax, you fellows will stick till hell freezes over on the 40 per cent increase in the sales tax.”

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: The Tory members were told. No arguments, none whatever; they were told.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: And so not one of them dares speak against the 40 per cent increase in the sales tax.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): The member is all wrong!

Mr. Renwick: And the member for Hamilton Mountain is nowhere to be seen.

Mr. Young: There’s going to be no revolt over this one.

Mr. Lewis: There is a bargain extracted here.

Mr. Renwick: A pound of flesh.

Mr. Young: A pound of flesh, yes.

Mr. Stokes: The cabinet bought the backbenchers’ silence.

Mr. Lewis: They had to support this bill or the member for Algoma (Mr. Gilbertson) becomes Treasurer.

Mr. Young: And a threat like that could only make them realize it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: The maple sugar king.

An hon. member: That’s burning a bridge.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, that decision having been made, the hon. Treasurer was chuckling, realizing that he didn’t have to have that money anyway. He could afford this kind of a compromise but he was going to keep that sales tax increase.

Mr. Renwick: A $65 million shellout.

Mr. Cassidy: And it may be back again next year.

Mr. Young: Yes, it was very easy. This morning’s Globe and Mail—the paper that’s published, I believe, in Toronto—points out this, “The seasonally adjusted real domestic product in February rose for the sixth consecutive month up a sharp 1.4 per cent from January, Statistics Canada reports.”

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): Did the member read Monday’s editorial?

Mr. Lewis: That’s the crux.

Mr. Young: It says, “The real domestic product was, in December, 183.3; in January, 184.9; in February 187.5.”

In other words, aside from the government’s miscalculations in the budgets over the past 10 years, the increase in the productivity of this country and in this province—because the productivity in Ontario is higher than the average across the country—is going to give the Treasurer the extra that he needs without the 40 per cent sales tax increase.

Mr. L. Maeck (Parry Sound): That’s a very good government.

Mr. Lewis: That’s the member’s view on it.

Mr. Young: Without it. And the Treasurer knows it.

Mr. Lewis: And he knows that.

Mr. Renwick: The Treasurer fuelled the fires of inflation at the same time.

Hon. Mr. White: Ontario leads the country.

Mr. Young: For a Tory paper like the Globe and Mail to give us that information this morning is really something.

Hon. Mr. White: Is there any place members would rather be?

Mr. Renwick: It is gouging the people.

Mr. McIlveen: We might be able to send him someplace.

Mr. Young: It would be so much better if the Treasurer had used a little milk of human kindness, a little common sense and a little bit of understanding in setting the tax rates.

The hon. Treasurer, Mr. Speaker, told us that this is a budget for the poor of Ontario. That’s what he said.

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): Maybe we should have our income tax as high as Manitoba’s.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): He's making a lot of people poorer with it!

Mr. Young: Already, we've heard some suggestions as to how we might improve it. It is a budget for the poor and so he removes the succession duties, so that the poor may will all their poverty to their children.

Mr. Renwick: That really helps the poor people.

Mr. Young: That is going to help a lot. That will help tremendously.

Mr. Renwick: Makes them double exempt.

Mr. Young: And of course he refused to touch the corporate profits in this province, which are growing by leaps and bounds. I have a few figures I'd like to put on the record for the education of the hon. Treasurer. These come from a very reputable publication, the Financial Post Survey of Mines for 1973 And the latest figures—

Mr. Maeck: Oh, we already have the latest figures.

Mr. Young: Most of the latest figures are for 1971. Just to give the Treasurer a few things here on these pages: Denison Mines profit in 1971—$10.188 million; Falconbridge—$17.5 million;—

Mr. Martel: They are starving.

Mr. Young: Yes. Hollinger Mines—$12.194 million; Inco—that poor starving enterprise up in Sudbury, I understand—$110 million in 1972.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Young: And the first quarter of 1973 brings $36 million, which looks as if this year is going to be a record. Kerr Addison—almost $4 million; Preston Mines—$4.6 million; Rio Algom—$9.6 million; Matagami Lake Mines, in 1972—$12.4 million; and Noranda in 1972—$64 million.

Mr. Renwick: And we must not increase the tax burden on those companies.

Mr. Martel: That's what Leo the Lollypop said.

Mr. Young: These companies use the resources which are owned by the people of Ontario, and we hardly touch them—and the Treasurer has refused to increase the tax.

Mr. Martel: Courageous lion of the north.

Mr. Young: As a matter of fact, most of these figures I gave are 1971.

Again, the Globe and Mail of March 22 tells us that the after-tax profit of Canadian corporations for 1972 rose more than 24 per cent above 1971.

Mr. Renwick: That's right.

Mr. Young: It says—

Mr. Martel: A lousy $16 million.

Mr. Young: —the greatest improvement was registered in the paper and forestry group, where profits rose 160 per cent from 1971.

Mr. Renwick: That's the group to which we are going to consider giving incentives.

Mr. Young: That's right! That's the group that needs incentives. Construction and materials—profits up 53.7 per cent. Food processing—food processing, mark you—37.7 per cent.

Mr. Renwick: Where is the Minister of Agriculture and Food now?

Mr. Young: General manufacturing—35 per cent. And for industrial mines, this group had an increase of profit last year of 77.6 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, with this kind of prosperity at that level in that sector it's incredible that the minister should choose not only to leave the burden the same, but to lighten it slightly—and at the same time put a 40 per cent increase in the sales tax upon the purchasers in this province.

Mr. Martel: A lousy $16 million from the mining industry last year.

Mr. Young: Right!

Mr. Martel: You know, the government should be ashamed of itself.

Mr. Young: The minister has heard a great deal, as we all have, from people across this province who have objected to this tax. I hope after this debate is over that those who led the revolt before will not listen to the orders they got and will exert some independence.

Mr. Gisborn: They have half a mind—they haven't got a whole one.

Mr. Young: Here are a couple of communications. One is from an anti-poverty coalition. It is a wire to the hon. William Davis, Premier, Queen's Park.

THE PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT'S WITHDRAWAL OF THE PROPOSED TAX ON HOME LIGHTING AND ENERGY APPRECIATED.

That's a pat on the back.

HOWEVER, THE ONTARIO ANTI-POVERTY COALITION REITERATES ITS DEMAND THAT THE PROPOSED TWO PER CENT INCREASE IN THE PROVINCIAL SALES TAX BE ALSO WITHDRAWN.

They are just a little out in their percentage. It's two points—40 per cent.

THIS INCREASED REGRESSIVE SALES TAX WILL BE A BURDEN ON THOSE LEAST ABLE TO BEAR IT.

Among the many letters which I received from my constituents is this one. I want to read a couple of paragraphs.

I am writing to protest the two per cent sales tax increase, not on energy alone, but on any item. I do not believe that the government needs this extra revenue. This tax at three per cent was only a temporary measure when introduced, and subsequently this only-temporarily-invoked measure rose to five per cent. Now it's to be seven per cent, and just how long before it's 10 or 15 per cent?

Mr. White's ridiculous statement, that the tax on energy was to help conserve these precious resources and that we should lower our heat and wear sweaters in our homes, indicates his frivolous attitude toward his responsibilities.

When questioned as to the reason for this tax, Mr. White's stock answer is, "You don't understand." Do government officials have so little regard for the intelligence of the average taxpayer? Perhaps a more effective method of conserving these resources might be to slow the export on energies to the United States.

Mr. Martel: It's a possibility.

Mr. Young: Then the final paragraph states:

Mr. Stanfield has been advocating price and wage controls. Perhaps Mr. Davis has not heard this, or perhaps he does not feel it applies to government spending—roads that have a beginning but no end, buildings erected but not opened, schools that are overequipped and do not really prepare students for the working force. Ontario has long been a Conservative stronghold; too long, it now seems.

Yours very truly,

I phoned the lady to acknowledge the letter. She said, "I voted Tory all my life, but this last time is the last Tory vote I'll ever cast."

Mr. Martel: There are many like her.

Mr. Good: One more Liberal seat.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: There are many like her across this province.

Mr. Renwick: The member should have been down in Stormont.

Mr. Young: In adding my voice to the protest against this tax, it's beyond my comprehension how with the resources we have in this province to bear the burden of taxation this government can stick to its resolve, or the resolve of the Premier and the Treasurer and whoever else was in on this terrible decision, to tax the people in this ruthless and unwarranted manner.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: I don't think we should wait until the minister returns.

Mr. Lewis: I think we should wait for the minister.

Mr. Renwick: Let's move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Lewis: No, no.

Mr. Martel: Move the adjournment.

Mr. Good: Where is the minister? It's his turn now.

Mr. Lewis: All right. Move the adjournment. We'll support it. Let's get the minister in here; it's his bill.

Mr. Ruston: Certainly he wants to hear my remarks.

Mr. Renwick: Where's the minister?

Mr. Lewis: I admit that the member for London North can handle it more competently, but it's the Treasurer's bill.

Mr. Good: It's their turn. Come on, I say to the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman).

Mr. Martel: Just move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Renwick: Move the adjournment. Come on.

Mr. Good: Come on, the member for Brantford (Mr. Beckett) should speak.

Mr. Martel: Go ahead.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult to go ahead on the bill before us, to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act without the Treasurer here.

Mr. Lewis: No, not a surrogate, the Treasurer.

Mr. Young: There are only 18 Tories here anyway, so if the rest of us go out there'd be no quorum left.

Mr. Renwick: Just move the adjournment.

Mr. Martel: Would the member move the adjournment?

Mr. Ruston: I am sure that he would want to listen to my brief words of wisdom, however brief they may be.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ruston: I feel it is too bad that he has to vacate the chamber at this time.

Mr. Renwick: Just move the adjournment.

Mr. Martel: The member for Brantford should move the adjournment.

Mr. Cassidy: Go ahead. We'll support the member.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak just briefly with regard to the introduction of the bill on first reading. It was probably one of the key things in the famous weekend, the Easter weekend, that the Conservative Party in Ontario will long remember, when the bill was presented for first reading on Wednesday afternoon prior to the Easter break. On the insistence of the Liberal Party caucus to see that a vote was called on the first reading; it put the onus on all those to stand up and be counted. And of course, as we all know now, the member for Hamilton Mountain had the courage and fortitude to stand up.

Mr. Renwick: Where is he tonight, for the second time? There he is. Come on, take your seat and stand up and be counted.

Mr. Ruston: I heard one of the other Conservative members say out in the hallway that the member stood up to oppose it, and he said, "Well, I found it much harder to stand up and vote for it," but yet he did. So, it's interesting to hear their comment on that. I am sure that the publicity the member for Hamilton Mountain obtained from it was probably the key thing in the defeat of the energy tax. Probably the opposition didn't get the credit that it should have for actually forcing the vote, which in turn caused a revolt of the Conservative backbenchers. However, we are happy, whatever way it was done, that that was removed.

This tax is, of course, being swept in now with the 40 per cent increase in the sales tax. As someone said, maybe the seven per cent energy tax was put in facetiously in order to slide through the seven per cent sales tax, the regular tax; but I don't think they are smart enough for that. I think it was just a goof by the Premier and the Treasurer in putting that tax on in the first place.

Mr. Good: It wasn't a goof, it's the way those people think.

Mr. Ruston: It's an interesting thing, when you look at the way the economy is going now. Just take the automobile industry, for instance, where they have sold more cars in the last year than I think any time in Canada. I was talking to three dealers in my own area who sell approximately a thousand cars a year. With the 40 per cent increase in the sales tax this will mean an increase of about $75,000 a year to the Province of Ontario from three dealers in a rural area in my locality. So you can just imagine what that's going to mean throughout the province.

With the amount of sales that were going on, with the increase in sales, we certainly didn't need this increase. People were buying, people were working, and the economy was starting to move, but when you have an increase such as this in sales tax you are increasing the spiral of inflation greatly, because governments do not produce money, they get it from other people. If a person is working to make a dollar that's fine, that is putting something in the economy. Taxes are not; they are taking it out of the economy. So then the worker or someone else has to produce more in order for him to have enough to exist on.

An interesting point: driving down Highway 401 not too long ago I stopped to get some gas in my car, and I carry the plates that are identifiable, and when I was having some gas put in the attendant said, "Well, how are things in Toronto?" That was on Wednesday evening about 7 or 8 o'clock, I guess, on my way home for the weekend, and I said, "Well, they're just not too good right now, with the new energy tax being proposed and an increase in the sales tax." "Well," he said, "it's certainly going to be terrible on me. I'm making $2.35 an hour pumping gas here in the service centre. I have three children and they expect us to live on that, and they increase taxes at the same time."

There are a couple of things wrong there that we will have to take up at another time. No one should be working for $2.35 an hour for a company that is leasing space from the Ontario government. However, we will look into that later. But that is an idea of what this tax will do to people on low incomes. It is just putting them down that much lower all the time.

Someone mentioned a while ago about the federal tax of 12 per cent. If you figure the 12 per cent federal tax on manufactured goods, figure the markup and the handling charges, you have about what is equal to seven per cent on the retail level. So we now have the provincial government taking the same amount of money out of goods as the federal government is in its sales tax. It may even figure out in some cases where the province will be obtaining more from that article than the federal government will be, on 12 per cent and then seven per cent on the retail level.

An interesting point: Not too long ago Bell Telephone applied for an increase in its rates of five cents a month and the provincial government was objecting to it. But it so happens that with the new sales tax I am going to be paying 14 cents a month more on one phone and about 35 cents a month more on the other one, and yet Bell was going to raise it only five cents. The government has raised it about three times what Bell itself had asked for.

Mr. Good: Without any hearings.

Mr. Ruston: With no hearings whatsoever. However, there will be a hearing of this government and its actions in 1975, we are quite sure of that, and we are quite sure the people will remember. In the past they have had a habit of forgetting, but I think that they are going to remember in the future some of the things that this government has failed to do.

I think that is about all I have to say now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill 98, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act, what I have to say may not seem very profound, and less important than what has been said before, but I do think it is important and will be profound to the many people across this province.

In regard to the subject of the budget that has been the topic of interest in the last few days, I feel that the Treasurer should be in his seat with other cabinet members, and therefore I move the adjournment of the debate and refuse to talk on this.

Mr. Deans: Bring the Treasurer back in to listen. He shows nothing but contempt for the House.

Mr. Gisborn moves the adjournment of the debate.

The House divided on the motion by Mr. Gisborn, which was negatived on the following vote.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 30, the "nays" 52.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The hon. member for Hamilton East may continue the debate.

Mr. Renwick: He has a good crowd.

An hon. member: At least he got the Premier to listen to him.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, in rising about 35 minutes ago to oppose Bill 98, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax, I moved the adjournment of the debate; and this party does not subscribe to the habit of delaying the proceedings of this House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: But I would think the issue before us is important enough to many people. The issue before us might not be one that would affect, on the surface, any member in this House.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Just a minute, the member's leader is heckling.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, it may be that the issue before us is not important enough to interest and affect the members of this House, because I don't think the imposition of the extra two per cent on the sales tax will affect any member of this House. They have—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: —as well as have many thousands of others in this province, an amount of disposable income that can be used for the things they desire. But everyone should understand that the imposition of this retail sales tax on low-income groups and those with large families will create an impact beyond what we would ever comprehend.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: I have been in this House 18 years now, and I've learned to understand the complexities and the problems that a government has in administering the growth of the economy in this province. But I can't understand the fiscal policy of this government at this day and age in 1973.

Mr. Maeck: If the member doesn't understand it, he shouldn't be speaking about it.

An hon. member: It passeth all understanding.

Mr. Gisborn: I first started to realize that I had to pay attention to the economy of this province in the 1920s, when I first went into a factory. I started to ask questions on why commodity goods were so scarce and the cost was so high.

Mr. Foulds: And the cats were so fat.

Mr. Gisborn: I never did get the answer to that. And I went through the Thirties, as many did here, and never got the answer to many of my questions during the 1930s as to why we had just as much land, there was just as much machinery around, just as many factories, and we couldn't produce the things that people needed. I began to understand a few things when the war broke out in September, 1939.

At the end of the Second World War, we all understood what was needed—rationing, tax increases, a change in the approach to the economy, the reduction of many of the restrictions that were placed upon people during the war years. We have now gone 28 years since the end of that war.

An hon. member: With the same government.

Mr. Gisborn: In the last three or four years the ills of our country have been blamed on the fiscal policies of another level of government. They were blamed on the retraction in our economy, the high unemployment, and mainly on the people who were unemployed and on those who were receiving welfare and assistance. They were made the scapegoats for our economic ills of the last three or four years.

What do we find today in this budget? In the economic summary of the budget, on page 60, we are told that we had 140,000 new jobs in 1972. We find that the employment rate declined by 4.8 per cent in 1972 from 5.2 per cent in 1971. I understand now that the figure has further declined to something like 3.9. In 1973, we are told that the employment growth rate is expected to continue, with close to 140,000 new jobs anticipated. The unemployment rate is expected to decline to 4.4. I am repeating myself—I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! Order.

Mr. Gisborn: The main point in the summary on the economy, is that the gross provincial product is expected to rise by 11 per cent in 1973; six per cent in real terms. Personal incomes are projected to rise 12.6 per cent in 1973, corporate profits should continue to grow strongly, with an anticipated gain of 12 per cent in 1973.

That sort of explains to me what the name of the game is, that with a wealthy province, those people who—

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

There are about seven or eight private conversations going on. Perhaps we could have some silence in the House.

Mr. Lewis: Well, it is mostly the House leader, Mr. Speaker, as he reconnoitres his way through trying to arrange to sit beyond 10:30; and let us tell him now that's a mistake!

Mr. Gisborn: Those figures tell me there should be a different direction in our fiscal policy at this point in 1973. Rather than putting the load back on those people who have carried it for the last 40 years, in this province and in this country, instead of the regressive tax system we are using we should listen, not just to the members of this party or of the official opposition, but to many of the economists across the country who study the situation and tell us it's a time to end the regressive tax system and go to a progressive tax system. Take the money from where it is and from where no one will be hurt.

With all of the tax incentives and the handouts and the sympathy for the industries and the businesses in this province, I have never heard them scream yet. I have never heard them even complain strongly. I think it's the government's responsibility to take the money from those who have it until they start to scream a little bit.

They make the people scream when they tax them, as has been evident in the last three or four days.

Not being an economist or a mathematician, I would think this is the direction in which we should be going now.

I want to deal specifically with part of the budget, and it is only a major part. In the explanatory note on page 98—or it's Bill 98, rather! Under the explanatory note referring to subsection 6, in its second sentence it says this: "It enacts an exemption for liquor, beer or wine sold under a special occasion permit."

In the budget the provincial Treasurer tells us—and I read from page 37, special occasions permit levy: "Holders of special occasion permits will not be required to collect retail sales tax on their sales, but will continue to pay the tax on their purchases. In lieu of retail sales tax on their sales"—mind you, in lieu of retail sales tax on their sales, "they will be required to pay a special levy in addition to the normal licence fee."

Now, as we understand it, when one obtains a special occasion permit he goes to the liquor store and buys his liquor and pays five per cent tax on it. Then they were expected—and I don't know what's happened to the administration mish-mash of the Liquor Control Board or the government, there must have been some failures in extracting that tax—but what are they going to do in lieu of that tax? They tell us that on spirits in bottles up to 30 oz the levy will be $1, that's $1 on a 25-oz bottle. That tells me that that's about a 20 per cent tax on that $5.25 bottle of liquor.

Bottles over 30 oz the levy is $1.50; so we move from a five per cent tax that this government did not provide methods to extract, to a 20 per cent tax on the same item.

That's one thing. And the Treasurer raises $3 million by that change; $3 million he raises by that change. I will say a word about that again later.

But what does this mean to the people who have been able to enjoy the use of special occasion banquet licences to gather together in social functions to keep themselves out of the high-price cocktail bars? I wonder what kind of lobbying pressure the cocktail bar operators have put on this government to get that tax change in regard to special banquet licences. It means that people now will not be able to afford to have special social functions unless they extract from themselves a high admission fee at the door, something like $3 per person, unless they cut down on the hiring of three- or four-piece bands to a jukebox sort of affair, and unless they cut down on the food they can provide, because no longer will they be able to make a little profit out of the sale of the liquor at the bar, which is the purpose of those kinds of functions.

I think that is one of the devastating parts of this budget. It is not the profound one that I spoke about, but it points up the book-cooking of this government. And this follows all through the budget if one has time to analyse many of these things.

What about the abolition of the tolls on the Burlington Bay Skyway and the Garden City Skyway? When those tolls were introduced, this party strongly opposed the principle of taxing our highways and bridges. It was a principle that we believed in, that we should have free access to our highways and bridges. The government said, "Nonsense, we are going to have to pay for these bridges. We are going to have to soak the users." And many of the people who lived in Burlington and the other side of the bay and who worked in Hamilton were soaked with those charges.

I wonder how much lobbying the trucking industry did to have that tax taken off. The trucking industry took over from the insurance companies as the strongest lobby in this province. Once the prepaid medical and hospital programme became a fait accompli and they were no longer in that lucrative business, then the strongest lobby became the trucking industry. We know how they fought against the tolls on the bridges. It wasn't principle with them; it was the dollar sign.

Now we are going to take those tolls off, and the trucking industry is very happy. They could have been left on until we had completed paying for those bridges, because they are not yet paid for; and that $3 million would have been fixed and would have taken care of this other imposition upon a group of people who are seeking enjoyment.

I'd urge those members of the Conservative Party who felt so strongly and had guts enough to oppose the sales tax being placed upon energy in this province, to use their strength again with the cabinet in having this sales tax reduced—not by the two per cent that has been added, but to three per cent. And let's start on the road to a progressive tax system.

It can be done in the way that was outlined by the critic for this party, the hon. member for York South—by extracting more money from the wealth tax, more money from the resources tax, and more money from the corporation tax. That's where the money should come from. It's about time the government had strength enough to put forward a policy of that nature, which would settle everyone down in this province so we would know where we were going in the future; and we wouldn't have such a mish-mash, cooked-up budget as is before us tonight.

I wonder where the member for Hamilton Mountain is tonight. I commend him greatly, as have many, for the courage he showed in taking the position he has taken. I understand he was handed today a plaque of courage by WASP, Women Against Soaring Prices. That's something to be proud of, and I am sure he will be re-elected in Hamilton Mountain on that basis with a greater majority if this government changes the tax system.

But I am afraid if they continue the kind of fiscal policies that they have started on in this session, his seat is not going to be safe even with the action he has taken.

The chips are down. The name of the game is changing the approach of this government in the coming years or it is going to have to face it when an election rolls around. Two years won't be very long away.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): I'd say the government is flying to disaster.

Mr. Gisborn: I hope there are other speakers who will cover other issues. I'm sorry I had to take the action I took, but I felt that there should be attention paid to this particular bill—

Mr. Foulds: They should apologize. The member shouldn't.

Mr. Gisborn:—the highlight of this session. Something had to be done to make members pay attention. I hope those who were out to functions enjoyed the part that they were able to attend before they were brought away by the bells, and I hope it doesn't happen too often.

Hon. Mr. White: The member is never in here. He shouldn't be such a hypocrite.

An hon. member: They look so nice.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, if anybody wants to talk about being a hypocrite, all the Treasurer has to do is analyse his own statements.

Mr. Ferrier: How would the minister know? He is never here.

Mr. Lewis: The member has served time in this place a lot longer than the minister.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: All the provincial Treasurer has to do to find out whether he was a doubletalker and a hypocrite, is to go back over his statements in this House flowing from the Smith committee; and other statements he theorized on in regard to a guaranteed wage for the people of this province.

Mr. Deans: When is the government bringing the member for Chatham-Kent back?

Mr. Gisborn: He doesn't just know where he's going; I think the only thing he's sure of is the statement he made not long ago that he wouldn't be running again after the 1971 election.

Mr. Foulds: He's running now.

Mr. Gisborn: I repeat that I hope that those who were called back enjoyed the time they had at whatever function they were at! We hope we don't have to hold up the proceedings of this House on such an important issue again.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, with 2½ minutes left on the clock, I would like to adjourn the House. I would like to say that tomorrow we will return to the debate on the same bill. I would like to remind the leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis) that I gave a commitment to the House earlier today in his presence which he knows quite well.

Mr. Cassidy: But the House leader has broken so many in the past.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: He breaks them more often than he keeps them.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I don't like those little front-running episodes that he created tonight and that temper which he can't control.

Mr. MacDonald: Talking about temper, that is a nice display.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 1973

The House met at 10 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This morning we will be having as guests in the west gallery students from Blind River District High School of Blind River and Streetsville Secondary School of Streetsville. There will also be guests, in both galleries, from Woodlands School of Mississauga.

A little later in the morning there will be students from St. Lawrence High School of Cornwall and also the YMCA of Lockport, NY. In the Speaker's gallery we will be favoured by a group of Rotary study exchange team people from Australia.

Statements by the ministry.

PARKS AND RECREATION ADMINISTRATION STUDY

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the hon. members of the House that I am initiating immediately an intensive study of the administration of parks and recreation in Ontario.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): What about Quetico?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I thought that started four years ago.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What about the select committee of 1961 which reviewed parks administration?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Just listen and get educated!

As the hon. members are well aware, the parks and recreational programmes of the government of Ontario have become increasingly complex and costly. While I believe I am quite justifiably very proud of my ministry's programmes in this area, I am most convinced the time has come to take a close look at our programmes and determine what policies and programmes and administrative structures are required to ensure efficiency, effectiveness and responsiveness to the people of Ontario both now and in the years ahead.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I think every minister should get up and say: "I am going to intensively study my department."

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I need not remind the members of the phenomenal growth in outdoor recreation in the past two decades. Our present-day provincial parks programme which can boast the finest park programme system in Canada really got under way as recently as 1956. It has grown spectacularly since then.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Why is the minister looking at it then?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The recent government reorganization brought within the purview of the Ministry of Natural Resources the equally important and successful outdoor recreational programmes of the Niagara Parks Commission, the St. Lawrence Parks Commission, the St. Clair Parkway Commission and the conservation authorities as well. Also we have the historical programmes.

We now want to stand back and take a look at our programmes and the other related programmes to determine how we can do our job even better. To indicate to members the importance the government attaches to this study—

Mr. Singer: These are defeated Tory candidates they have to give jobs to.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —I am pleased to inform the House that my very able parliamentary assistant, the member for Sault St. Marie (Mr. Rhodes), will be the chairman of the study committee. He will be assisted by members of the committee—the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan), who is chairman of the Niagara Parks Commission; Mr. J. F. Bauer, chairman of the Grand River Conservation Authority; Mr. J. A. Dulude, retired commissioner of parks and recreation for the city of Ottawa; and J. W. Keenan, executive director of the division of parks for the Ministry of Natural Resources.

As further evidence of the importance of this study, I am pleased to announce that I have appointed Mr. D. M. Peacock, general manager of the St. Lawrence Parks Commission, to the position of full-time executive director of the study, reporting to the member for Sault Ste. Marie. Mr. Peacock's replacement at the St. Lawrence Parks Commission will be announced in the very near future.

Mr. Lewis: The government would not want any women to look at parks in Ontario. I mean, God forbid that should be allowed!

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): What about Quetico and Algonquin?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Has the member for Scarborough West got a thing about women?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I have, and the government will have to buckle into it one day.

MERCURY TASK FORCE.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I wish today to announce initiatives being undertaken by the Ministry of Natural Resources in response to certain recommendations contained in the fourth report of the interdepartmental task force on mercury. As you know, Mr. Speaker, few problems—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That was on the CBC an hour ago.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—have been more vexing to the residents of northwestern Ontario, particularly those whose livelihoods depend on the fishing in the Wabigoon and English River systems. In particular, the government has had a great concern for the health and the well-being of the native people of this part of Ontario—

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): That's a discovery.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—particularly those of the Grassy Narrows and the Whitedog bands, and action on this matter has already been announced by my colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter).

In compiling this report, members of the task force heard briefs from several groups representing the Indian people of northwestern Ontario, including Grand Council Treaty No. 3, and the Grassy Narrows band. In their briefs, the Indians requested the assistance of the government in establishing a broad, comprehensive programme of social and economic incentives to replace losses sustained by the bands as a result of mercury pollution.

In addition to assistance already provided during the past two years by the Ontario government, the Indians have requested that the government undertake with them an intensive analysis of key problems to assist in the re-establishment of their communities. The underlying request to the government is that the Indian bands themselves be permitted to take the leadership in determining which social, economic and cultural programmes would be of greatest benefit to them and that the Ministry of Natural Resources co-operate closely with the chiefs and councillors of the bands concerned.

The matters raised by the Indians cover a broad spectrum of existing government programmes at both the federal and provincial levels.

Their goal is to create a stable social environment and, with the assistance of governments, establish a firm foundation for positive economic progress in the years ahead.

The bands have already indicated their preference not to accept an invitation already extended to them by the government of Ontario for new lands to replace those they now occupy. The government accepts their decision in this regard, and the Ministry of Natural Resources is prepared to accept many of the suggestions put forward by the bands for economic development programmes which will result in improved economic opportunities in the years ahead and an alternative food source.

A committee composed of officials of the Ministry of Natural Resources has already been formed to undertake initial planning of ministry programmes to benefit the bands and to co-operate closely with the officials of the Indian community development branch of the Ministry of Community and Social Services. This committee will work closely with the bands and meetings to begin long-range planning and short-term objectives will be held in the near future.

The committee will also work closely with consultants from other ministries of the government including economists and community planners as requested by the bands.

The Ministry of Natural Resources will also be prepared to take such initiatives as are necessary to work closely with the federal government's Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whose special responsibility it is to provide for the administration and economic well-being of Indian reserves.

The Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission has indicated its willingness to embark on a programme to clear flood-damaged timber from Umfreville Lake and arrangements have been made to increase the supply of pulpwood from band sources to the Ontario Minnesota Pulp and Paper Co. at Kenora.

A resources development manager is in the Kenora area and will assist the bands in a variety of short-term projects. These include such traditional employment opportunities as tree planting, firefighting, increased trapping, pulpwood operations, crafts and other programmes that will not require the Indians to travel any great distances from their reservations.

Our aim will not only be to restore past losses experienced by the bands but to strengthen the community life of the reservations and the strong family ties which are so important to our native people. In addition, my ministry will ensure that access is available to other lakes in the immediate area of the reserves to ensure that alternate food supplies are available.

These programmes will ensure that the immediate and long-term needs of both Indian bands will be met, and they will avoid economic hardship to Indians as a result of mercury pollution of these waters.

Mr. Lewis: What did all that mean?

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, I should say. I should say.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Why doesn't the hon. member act like a leader?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: His apprenticeship is over.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege is that a couple of questions asked yesterday by the hon. member for High Park led even Canada's leading newspaper to publish on its front page a story in which—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Esau?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —the words "accused" and "charges" and "$300 to save 15 minutes". Mr. Speaker, I consider that as a smear.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is joking. He is an accomplished joke and doesn't know it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The member for York South did it for years—

Mr. Lewis: Why doesn't the minister act like an adult?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The member for York South did it for years, and the leader of the NDP is doing it himself.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is making a fool of himself and he doesn't know it.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): He found the only way to make the front page of the Globe, and he's going to milk it for everything it's worth.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member earlier this week asked me questions about how many times during 1972 I had used a government plane—

Mr. MacDonald: Why didn't the minister answer him?

Mr. Shulman: He didn't mention Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I gave him the answer that I had used the plane once to go to Aylmer to address the police college there. Having taken my seat, a few minutes later I got up to ensure that I was as correct as possible and indicated that to my recollection I had also flown to St. Catharines.

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): Oh that's tough.

Mr. Shulman: He didn't mention Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Upon reviewing the matter I have discovered that flight was not in 1972, since it's so difficult to recall everything that one does in a busy political life.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That flight occurred on April 23, 1971.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is determined to make a major political fiasco of this airplane issue.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The minister has the logbooks, has he?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: My timetable on April 23, 1971, is as follows—

Mr. Lewis: We hang on every word.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Let's clear up the smear. Let's clear up the smear.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): We've got a point of privilege already.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): There is no point of privilege.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it a point of privilege that anybody should get up for such a specious reason and document his daily schedule in April 1971?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many issues of the Globe and Mail were published, but I read it and that is enough for me; and I'm going to clear that story up.

Mr. MacDonald: Hold a press conference.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: On April 23, 1971, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order; order please! So far I have not heard any indication as to what point of privilege there might be.

Mr. Lewis: It is not a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister will indicate clearly to the House what the breach of privilege might have been, I'll be pleased to listen to it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, by virtue of his questions and by virtue of reports, has led the people of this province and of this city to believe that I improperly used a government plane. That is my point of privilege. And some 400,000—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: On a point of order, sir, surely you can use the prerogatives of your office to clear up this mess and just indicate clearly that until the logbooks are tabled there is nothing more we can do about it; these ministers are going to protest that they're being smeared. Let's have the facts!

Mr. Lewis: I'm sure the Premier (Mr. Davis) would have wished this plane to have remained on the ground!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, from 3 to 4 p.m. on Friday, April 23 I was at 399 Adelaide St. W.—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: What did the minister have for breakfast?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —participating in the opening of the Indian Crafts of Ontario, to which we had donated some $200,000 when I was the minister. At 5 o'clock I was expected to be turning a sod for Heidehof—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Did the minister have tea?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I only hope that those associated with the Heidehof Home for Aged could be here.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I was turning the sod—

Mr. Lewis: He was turning the sod.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —for the Heidehof Home for the Aged—

Mr. Lewis: When was that? In April? What date was that?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: April 23, 1971.

Mr. Lewis: What time of the day was that?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That was at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, in St. Catharines.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order please.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I'm still not certain what the point of privilege might be. I presume there is one there and I will read the Hansard report and see if there is any action necessary.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: At this point I simply don't know what the point of privilege is.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Have you made a ruling, Mr. Speaker?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: He is asking the minister to sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. minister completed his submission through the Chair to the House as to what privilege has been breached?

Mr. Lewis: The Premier has become a red Tory.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the member for High Park, by his innuendos, has implied that I have misused a government plane. I am clearing the record.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Ask a question. Ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: And I'm quite prepared to have the people of Indian Crafts of Ontario and the people of the Heidehof Home for the Aged pass judgement. I had to be, in one evening, in three different places in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Who did he take with him?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Oral questions.

Mr. Shulman: On a point of privilege. I will give you $10 for every minute if he will produce the logbooks to substantiate what he said. I will be only too glad to make that $100 for every minute.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. Because of the emerging circumstances and controversy over the use of government aircraft by cabinet ministers and others, will he now consider at least withdrawing from his former position that this information is privileged and, in fact, make it available to the House and to the public?

Mr. Lewis: Just another little strategic withdrawal.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Mr. Speaker, I think it was indicated yesterday when one of my colleagues, the Treasurer (Mr. White), was discussing this matter of public accounts; I would think, Mr. Speaker, that this would be the appropriate legislative committee to discuss this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: One by one?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Surely it won't be necessary for each individual minister to be called before the committee unless the committee sees fit? Why would not the Premier, with his responsibility for all of the ministries, simply put the information on the table and the committee on public accounts can deal with it as it sees fit?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a decision the committee on public accounts can and should properly make.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Doesn't the Premier think that it would make more sense to table the logbooks and clear the air, rather than have this another government fiasco, week by week, as one after another the ministers report what then appear to be indiscretions, perhaps real, perhaps alleged? Doesn't it now make sense to him just to table the logbooks and get it over with?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): We're trying to help.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I say, with respect, this matter was raised by the Provincial Auditor where he made the observation as to the accounting procedure and the question of policy. The question of policy as it related to the use of government aircraft we think has been made quite clear, and I think this is properly a matter for the public accounts committee to discuss in the company of the Provincial Auditor.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Is it clear that the Premier is not going to undertake to use his majority on the public accounts committee to continue suppressing information?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there has been no indication that any government majority on the public accounts committee has been attempting to suppress anything.

An hon. member: Never, ever, ever.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Premier should give us his undertaking as head of the government and head of the Progressive Conservative Party that such will not be the case, and that the information will be made totally available to the public accounts committee.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Is the Premier going to respond?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say to the Premier that we have no assurance; we do not have the logbooks.

Mr. Speaker: This is the question period. Is this a question?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, when the ministers appear before the committee we have no assurance that we are getting the facts as outlined by the logbooks, and I would ask the Premier if he is aware that doctoring logbooks is a federal offence?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): The member knows all about it.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask the Premier why he will not say yes or no. Will he furnish the logbooks?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary to that, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Premier shouldn't have to answer that.

Mr. Sargent: He has not answered my question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: He doesn't have to answer it.

Mr. Sargent: Are you aware, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to understand the Premier. Is the Premier saying that he sees fit for the public accounts committee to call every cabinet minister, one by one, and presumably others it may see fit, to bear witness to their trips in 1972, or 1971, or 1970, and that that is the way he thinks it most appropriate to proceed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am just saying this, that I have never directed any committee of this government—

Mr. Lewis: I know that, but I am asking him for an opinion.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—nor should I, and that this is a matter that really should be at the discretion of public accounts. If public accounts is satisfied, after discussing it with X number of ministers, that obviously the public interest has been served, I think this is the determination it should make. I have always maintained the position here—and I continue to maintain it—that the head of government should not direct any legislative committee.

Surely this is what is at issue here?

Mr. Singer: Could the Premier tell us the basis for his unique theory that a committee of this House is more important, or is able to make more valid and binding decisions, than is this House?

And why, by the same token, when information is asked in this House, does the Premier say that only the committee can elicit that information? Surely the House is paramount and why doesn't the Premier recognize that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have never said the House is not paramount. But as I understand the traditions and structures in the parliamentary system and the system as we practise it here, legislative committees are emanations of this House; they report to this House. I think if one goes back to some of the discussions we have had in this House over a number of years as to the functioning of the committees, the route that is being suggested—that public accounts deals with this matter—is really quite consistent with observations that have been made by members opposite on a number of occasions that do not relate to this specific issue.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: In this case it is an evasion by the Premier.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, of a very specific kind, just out of curiosity: Does the Premier know anything about what is affectionately termed the "William Davis champagne flight" to Atlanta, Ga., for the Masters tournament? Does he know anything about that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I don't. I do know that some two years ago, along with whatever number a DC-9 holds—and I can't give the leader of the New Democratic Party that information—

Mr. Lewis: I don't know either.

Mr. Stokes: About 90.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—I, along with whatever number that particular aircraft—and I think it was a DC-9—hold, went to Atlanta, Ga., and spent a day—and I believe it was a Saturday—a very pleasant day, watching the Masters golf tournament. I received an invitation again last year and was unable to go, and I received an invitation to go again this year and I had planned to go, but unfortunately other matters came up and I was not able to go. It turned out to be relatively fortuitous because—

Mr. Reid: Bill Kelly wanted him somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was also a Saturday, if memory serves me correctly. And while I'm not a great follower of golf I must confess I enjoyed my trip there two years ago, but because I wasn't able to go this year I didn't miss a great deal because I think that was the day that the Masters was rained out, and those who did go—while I'm sure they had a very pleasant time—didn't see a great deal of golf, because it wasn't played.

Mr. Lewis: Who invited the Premier?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the invitation came to a number of people and had nothing whatsoever to do with the government. This is the first occasion—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well it didn't; nothing whatsoever to do with the government. This is the first I had heard that it was called the "Bill Davis champagne flight" to Atlanta.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is probably the first time it was called that.

Mr. Lewis: Well, it is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But, Mr. Speaker, if it was called that—

Mr. Shulman: Who paid for the Premier's ticket?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I didn't do it; I had nothing whatsoever to do with it—

Mr. Shulman: That's how they sell the additional tickets. It's an attraction.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is the promotional gimmick.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I am sure that the leader of the New Democratic Party fully appreciates that this had nothing whatsoever to do with the government.

Mr. Lewis: Who was the host?

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I assume once again that it was a DC-9, but I am not sure of this; I think it was a DC-9, in that I don't think Air Canada is using Viscounts or Van-guards to any great extent.

Mr. Lewis: Who was the host? Who was the host of that flight?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know who the host was—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We have heard reports. The Premier knows who the host was.

Mr. Lewis: Who invited the Premier?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —but my recollection is that the people who go pay whatever the tariff is, and it is arranged by a group of people who by and large are avid golf fans.

Mr. Lewis: Golf enthusiasts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's right, which I think is really quite appropriate—

An hon. member: And that's the way it is.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: I was just interested.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I just want to make it clear that I had every intention of going, but due to certain matters I couldn't; as I say, it turned out well from the standpoint that there was no golf played on that particular occasion.

Mr. MacDonald: The Premier's answer is almost as long as the Solicitor General's.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Well, the members opposite asked for it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, over the past two or three months we have been trying to crystallize where we stand at this point to get a clearer picture of the misuse of government aircraft. Does the Premier not feel that if he furnished the logbooks, if he had the guts to furnish the logbooks, that we would get a better picture of misuse than asking ministers about times and places where they were? We must have the logbooks to prove whether the Premier is right or wrong.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): The auditor is right.

Mr. MacDonald: This is repetitious.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: If the hon. member stayed here all week, he would know what is going on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With respect, I would say that question has already been answered; and once again, with respect, there was nothing in the auditor's report, as I read it, that indicated misuse. The auditor's report, I think, made three points, if memory serves me correctly—

Mr. Sargent: Families went along—

Hon. Mr. Davis:—firstly, that the accounting procedure should be altered, and that the ministry should be charged for the use of government aircraft as it relates to a particular function of that ministry. There was one other recommendation, as I recall it, that related to the charge for the general servicing or maintenance of government aircraft—and I hope I am right in my recollection—that this should be charged to the Ministry of Government Services.

Mr. Sargent: Then what is the Premier afraid of?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Oh, sit down! Sit down!

Hon. Mr. Davis: The government suggests—and we think this is right—

Mr. Sargent: What is he afraid of?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—that this should still be maintained within the Ministry of Natural Resources. The other point the auditor's report made was that there should be some policy definition, and that policy definition has now been provided to members of this House and to the Provincial Auditor. Those were the three points that he made.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member was away.

Mr. Sargent: I'd say the Premier is chicken.

An hon. member: No.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, he is; he's chicken.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I'd hate to tell the House what we think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: We are forgetting an important part of that report.

ALGONQUIN PARK PLAN

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Does the Minister of Natural Resources recall the establishment of an advisory group on Algonquin Park in September 1969, I believe? Has he not received recommendations on an overall plan for Algonquin Park in the interim period? And if that is so, why did he not include a statement of the government policy on an overall plan for Algonquin Park at the same time that he announced the establishment of yet another committee of review, examination and recommendation for the Ontario parks system in general?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd have to say to the Leader of the Opposition that the items are not related at all. The new committee that I've established under my very able parliamentary assistant, the member for Sault Ste. Marie—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Is that the same fellow we know?

Mr. MacDonald: The last time a minister was praised like that was after the provincial Treasurer goofed.

Mr. Lewis: They spend a lot of time expressing confidence in each other these days.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—will look at the administration and the efficiency of the present operations, such as the St. Lawrence Parks Commission, the Niagara Parks Commission and the St. Clair Parks Commission to bring some uniformity and a co-ordinated approach to this problem. It has nothing to do with and is not related to the Algonquin Park situation at all.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary then: Why doesn't the minister clear up the feeling within the community of the whole of the Province of Ontario, particularly among the conservationists who are independent of the minister and the friends in whom he has so much confidence, that the lack of government policy concerned with Algonquin Park amounts to complete irresponsibility; that in fact that government has been provided with recommendations from the advisory committee that have not been acceded to, even in part; and that the minister is continuing to allow other uses of Algonquin Park that would not be permitted under any rational plan?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot agree with the comments of the Leader of the Opposition in the way that the committee has been handling—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Algonquin Wild-lands League feels that way about it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well, that is one group, Mr. Speaker. I assure the Leader of the Opposition that we are dealing with the first report of the Algonquin Park advisory committee—it is before the resources development policy field now.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The minister has been dealing with that for two years.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: And if he is aware of the situation, he knows we reappointed a further committee looking into other aspects of problems involved in the Algonquin Park situation.

Mr. Lewis: We know about the minister's committees.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: And when we have its further report we will consider that too. I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that I will be able to make a statement in connection with the Algonquin Park report in the not too distant future.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: With due regard to his policy on parks, why has the minister not taken any action on the Quetico advisory report which he has had since last August? Since the minister hasn't taken any action up to this point, I gather that none of those recommendations will be put into force for this coming summer?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, just to review briefly the results of the Quetico Park advisory committee, it was handed to me last fall and I said at that time that I would ask for a further public input by the end of the year. This input has been received and is being completely reviewed and digested within my ministry. This has been completed and the matter is now before the resources development policy field and we have dealt with it up to a point. We are proceeding with it, and I am hopeful here again that I will be able to make a firm statement in the not too distant future.

Mr. Stokes: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the announcement made this morning by the minister mean that it is possible that any action taken to preserve Quetico may be delayed for another couple of years—or is it completely independent of either Algonquin or Quetico Park?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, the last part of the comment by the member for Thunder Bay is correct—it is completely independent of Quetico and Algonquin. It just deals with the structure of the parks system that we have in the province right at the moment.

Mr. Stokes: A last supplementary: Since the minister has had a comprehensive report on Quetico, and one that was widely accepted throughout the province, is it reasonable to assume that we will hear about government action to preserve it as a wilderness area in the very near future?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I think I can assure the member of that; and I also want to take the opportunity again to compliment the members of the Quetico advisory committee on the excellent recommendations they presented to my ministry.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary and curiosity, Mr. Speaker, are the members of the minister's new committee, chaired by his very able parliamentary assistant, paid a per diem for the work they do?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes they are, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Does that extend to the parliamentary assistant and to the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan)?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It extends to the member for Haldimand-Norfolk, but I understand it does not extend to the chairman.

Mr. Lewis: What are the per diems the minister is paying for that committee and for the member for Haldimand-Norfolk?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, Management Board has a formula established on an escalating scale as related to the number of meetings that are held over the year. Right at the present time I am not aware of the number of meetings that will be held, so therefore I can't relate that to the per diem rate.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary: Does the minister mean that he is paying to civil servants who are drawing annual salaries per diem allowances over and above those annual salaries?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, Mr. Speaker, not the civil servants; those individuals and those private people on the committee.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not think it is not correct that the member for Haldimand-Norfolk should also be receiving a per diem, besides his member's salary and his Niagara Parks Commission salary?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think this acceptable, Mr. Speaker. The member will be doing some work beyond his normal duties, so quite understandably he should be compensated.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Although all of us are kind of fond of the member for Haldimand-Norfolk, doesn't he think this dispensing of backbench patronage is just going overboard a bit in this case? I mean he has already had enough parks commissions.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I think the member for Haldimand-Norfolk has a tremendous amount of input for this particular committee.

Mr. Lewis: I cannot disagree, but he is a full-time member of the House.

Mr. Reid: He is being paid twice already!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He is a chairman of the Niagara Parks Commission and he was selected because of his knowledge and his ability to provide a tremendous input.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

SOIL SAMPLE PROCESSING

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of the Environment.

Can he explain why in his ministry there is such a long delay in the processing of soil samples associated with applications for lot severance in subdivision planning, when, in the case of an application by Multi-Malls in Chatham township, his ministry was able to provide the official go-ahead as far as soil samples are concerned three days after the original application?

An hon. member: A 24-hour service.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, we have not yet proclaimed any part of the province under part 7 of the Act, where the ministry would be responsible for the approval of private waste systems. We do act on the request of health units to give them additional information where there is a severance and they want our expertise, if they feel that there is a problem that their own staff can't handle. In fact, in my own riding I'm just trying to find out why there have been some delays, because apparently the health units have been handing them all over to our people, and we just don't have the staff to do it all.

Hon. R. F. Nixon: How about in Chatham?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As far as Chatham is concerned, my understanding is that the approval to Multi-Malls was given by the local health unit.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Was that not based on the recommendation from the Ministry of the Environment, pertaining specifically to soil samples which will permit this Multi-Malls development to go ahead on septic tanks and drilled wells?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): The minister's department approved it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, there was an informal inquiry made of our man in the area on the basis of whether the soil in that area was suitable for septic tanks for what we understood to be about six residences. We subsequently learned that they were proposing a townhouse or an apartment development.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: An $8-million development.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We indicated to them that they would have to have a private system and that it would be in an entirely different class than two or three houses.

I can't tell the hon. Leader of the Opposition at the moment where their proposal stands, but we did indicate two things. One is that if they were drawing more than 10,000 gallons a day from the well to service both the shopping centre and whatever residential complex they planned they would have to get a permit from us and that it would be conditional on ensuring that the wells of the farmers and other residents in the area were not affected. This could only be established after extensive testing.

We also indicated that if there was a large development there it could not be served by septic tanks. There would have to be some sort of a private waste system.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary: Does the minister's statement then mean that the development of the original Multi-Malls proposal has been stopped because every indication is that it's going forward?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I really can't say, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, there are two proposals. One is a shopping centre complex by Multi-Malls. The other, I believe, may be by a different firm. It is for, or was supposed to be for, some residential accommodation. Where that stands, I don't know.

I understand that the township gave the building permits. Subsequently, the Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs put a minister's order, as I understand it, on the township to prevent—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Anything further.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —anything further, but it was too late—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: But it had previously been approved.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —to do anything because the township council had issued the building permit.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

PARKS AND RECREATION ADMINISTRATION STUDY

Mr. Lewis: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. I'm sorry to pursue this, but just to clear it in my mind, is he saying that the additional per diems that are being paid to this new committee to look at parks extend only to the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan), or do they extend also to the civil servants whom he has appointed, the head of the parks branch, etc.?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, Mr. Speaker. I said it did not extend to the civil servants who are on the committee.

Mr. Lewis: Just the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No. The chairman of the conservation authority and the gentleman we appointed from Ottawa, Mr. Dubiel, I think.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Dulude.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Dulude. And the other fellow's name? Does the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development have the list there?

Mr. Lewis: I see.

Mr. Good: The minister should know his friend's name without looking at a sheet of paper.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's Mr. Bauer, who is the chairman of the Grand River Conservation Authority, and Mr. Dulude, who is the commissioner of parks and recreation for the city of Ottawa.

Mr. Lewis: Okay, thank you.

INTEREST PAYMENTS ON GERMAN LOANS

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the provincial Treasurer how much more money will we now be paying by way of interest rates, as a result of the successive revaluations of the German mark, to handle our rather extensive foreign loans with that country?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I'll take the question as notice.

ONTARIO POSITION ON PENSIONS AT 60

Mr. Lewis: Right; thank you.

Another question of the provincial Treasurer: Why is Ontario's position at the federal-provincial meeting of social welfare ministers in opposition to full pension at age 60? Why is Ontario opposing that principle?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, we're not, I think, opposing it, so much as suggesting that, as with all other pension plans, it should be available to the recipient at age 65 whether or not he is working, in the same way that a corporation pension or a union pension plan is available to a man at retirement age, whether or not he continues to be in the work force.

Secondly, we have recommended that pensions be available at an earlier age, reduced on an actuarial basis.

Now that's the position we took into the conference. Whether or not my colleague has modified that in the light of federal government's proposition or proposals I don't know.

Mr. Lewis: Well that, with respect, was my question, as I understand it.

Why would the Treasurer want to actuarially lower the pension? Why has he not accepted the principle that age 60 is now a legitimate retirement age for full pension?

Hon. Mr. White: I think it is just a matter of money, Mr. Speaker. These funds are flowing in; for a period of time there are very considerable surpluses which are being utilized by the provinces.

The history of the social security system in the United States indicates that it is very tempting for the politicians to utilize those surplus funds to build up benefits for people coming into the social security system, with the result that sometime later the payments then become very high; I think in the US they are up to something like 11 per cent of the payroll.

Now it's tempting for politicians here in Canada to say let's enrich these pensions, using these reserve funds which have been established, and let somebody else pay for it later. But—well, the member shouldn't shake his head, because the pattern in the United States has just been horrendous—I think it is most unwise for us to incur these costs, to be saddled on those people paying into the pension plan two years to 10 years from now; and gearing it back on an actuarial basis does minimize the payout.

Mr. Renwick: There is nothing comparable here to the US situation.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, of course it minimizes the payout. It reduces it.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Could I ask the Treasurer if he is aware that in this province there are special provisions in various areas where it is mandatory that women retire at 60, whereas men are permitted to continue to work until 65? Is that part of the consideration in determining the policy of the government of Ontario, as it is related in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is. I am glad to have the opportunity to respond. We have made our legislation flow both ways in this jurisdiction.

For instance, when I was the Minister of Revenue we extended interspousal exemptions both ways in a way that hadn't been the case before. I venture to say that in a dozen or more statutes we have given women full rights and full responsibilities with men. Our position in Ottawa is that the spouse, whether male or female, has equal rights under the federal legislation. So that's exactly what we are doing.

Mrs. Campbell: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I don't think, with respect, the Treasurer understood the question. It is not a matter of the spouse, it's a matter of the person in the work force. In municipal government, for example, women are required to retire from their jobs at age 60. Men are permitted to continue until age 65. It always seems to end up as a matter of spouses and I am pointing out that this is a matter of concern with the philosophy that is being espoused by this government and Ottawa. I would like clarification or whether it is understood.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, as I have said, we have attempted in recent years to make men and women fully co-equal with respect to rights and responsibilities. This philosophy is enshrined in a number of statutes and—I am getting into an area here which is not my specialty—it is embedded, if I am not mistaken, in the Human Rights legislation. Now if there are provisions like this for a group of municipal employees or in a corporation, I should think that the women thereby affected would have some course of action.

Mr. Deans: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Doesn't the minister recognize that the saving in terms of the amounts of jobs that might be made available and the saving in terms of unemployment insurance benefits which will not have to be paid to those at the younger end of the work spectrum would be sufficient to offset the additional costs of reducing the pensionable age from 65 to 60?

Hon. Mr. White: No, sir.

WOMEN'S CONFERENCE ON WORLD CONDITIONS

Mr. Lewis: My last question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. What inspired this conference "Designed to Enlighten Women on World Conditions"? I draw the minister's attention to the phrase from his ministry, "a conference designed to enlighten women on world conditions and how they can contribute to the province's well-being." Who inspired this and who puts out this trash?

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am not aware of the particular piece of literature that the leader of the NDP has in his hand, but I would be glad to look at it. I am not even—

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, since the minister is one of the featured speakers at the conference designed to enlighten women on world conditions, which I gather is occurring—

Mr. Ruston: Better give him a programme.

Mr. Lewis: —at the Royal York Hotel in May—the minister recalls it now, does he? He had, perhaps, forgotten the enlightenment that would be dispensed. Can he tell us how all of this originates and when he is going to stop this nonsense?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but in the original question I wasn't quite aware of the conference to which the leader of the NDP is referring.

It is organized by the women's committee from the ministry which has been in operation since about 1964. There has been a women's advisory committee, Mr. Speaker, and we think it has produced some excellent results for this province.

It has kept women in this province—about whom the NDP leader seems to be much concerned in recent days—well informed of the government's position on policies we are establishing. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the challenge these ladies will be offered this year is to design these programmes—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I am sure that the challenge of this government is considerably better than it would be from some other quarters of the House. I say to you that, while I don't consider it a cheap party, I consider it a responsibility of this government to see that the women of this province are informed on a first-hand basis exactly what we are doing to improve their position in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I might say, in closing, that we are looking forward to a very successful conference. I am sure that with speakers such as the Minister without Portfolio (Mrs. Birch) and others, it will produce great results for the women of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary: What is this special relationship between this ministry and Morrison Lamothe Frozen Foods?

Mr. Cassidy: They are big Tories.

Mr. Lewis: The director of the company's consumer services will speak at this conference; another one of its senior spokeswomen spoke at the previous conference which I raised in the House, and the only woman the Premier is taking to the United Kingdom with him on that delegation to seek trade is also associated with Morrison Lamothe Frozen Foods. What is this special relationship?

As a second supplementary, has Morrison Lamothe Frozen Foods contributed to the Progressive Conservative Party in the past and, if so, in what amount?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first of all the selection of Mrs. Hale, who was with Morrison Lamothe, was because we believe her to be an extremely well-qualified person to speak on affairs that relate to developments in the woman's world. Let me say that Mrs. Hale, Mr. Speaker, has been recognized for her outstanding talent not only by people in the Province of Ontario but throughout North America.

Mr. Lewis: There are other women.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We think she has great talent and she will be able to leave a message with the women who will attend our conference on May 2. May I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that Morrison Lamothe is located in an excellent part of the Province of Ontario, eastern Ontario. I am delighted that the Premier has invited the president of that particular organization to go with us to the UK later on in the month of May.

As far as the outstanding bakery from Ottawa, Morrison Lamothe, is concerned—and they do produce other products in this city, Toronto, under the name of Farmhouse products, Mr. Speaker—their relationship to the Conservative Party is well known. As far as their political contribution, I would not be aware of any of their participation in that field.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: What does the minister mean "their relationship to the Conservative Party is well known"? I am sorry, I am one of those who doesn't know it. Can he tell me?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I would suggest that the leader of the NDP consult with the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: We may not be able to find out what the relationship of the company is, but would the minister not agree that this conference and particularly the other conferences that have been taking place around the province are basically a programme for political propagandizing with public funds? They are heavily subsidized from this ministry, and it has been one of Bob Macaulay's original ideas which turned out very, very badly indeed. It's a waste of public funds.

Mr. Lewis: It is worse than that. It depreciates women's role in this province.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Leader of the Liberal Party, first of all, if he wishes to talk about them being a source of propaganda, Mr. Speaker, the people who are invited to participate in the conferences do not represent a particular organization or party in this province.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Who do they represent and who invited them? Who gets the invitation?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Let me say they cut across the line. We invite those who represent political organizations, whether it be the Conservative Party of Ontario, or Liberal organizations or NDP, as well as people from church groups and other associations right across the province. We do not, Mr. Speaker, as some would lead us to believe, try to sell a programme of this government on a singular and partial basis. But we do try to inform the people, the women of this province, what this government is doing to improve their position in this province.

Mr. Lewis: I don't think so.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister inherited this hocus-pocus, this political tool here, is it true that he is setting up a council for men in the same way?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I would think that the member for Grey-Bruce is likely aware of the fact that we do, as the male race, participate much more—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The opposition rests its case!

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that they will appreciate that we, as the male group in this particular society, have a little more to do with the affairs of the day and so they have not given consideration to this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I have a little trouble trying to decide whether some of those in the House really belong to that side of the race.

Mr. Lewis: No wonder the minister is still a bachelor!

OTTAWA FAMILIES' HOUSING PROBLEM

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern of the member for Ottawa South.

However, I have been trying to talk to the Premier for more than a week in this House. Last Tuesday I sent the Premier a letter asking him if he would intervene personally in the cases of seven families in my riding who cannot find housing, who are being evicted or bankrupted by high rents, and for whom neither my office, myself nor anybody else in Ottawa can do anything. Can the Premier intervene?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I received the letter from the hon. member and we are taking a look at it.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary: What will the Premier do to prevent similar situations arising, and to solve the problems of many other families who don't even come to his attention like this?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: There is no answer. I think that should go on the record, Mr. Speaker. There is no answer from the Premier.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): Let the record show that the member for Ottawa Centre can't do his job.

Mr. Cassidy: What are the government members doing? They are supporting the speculators and taking money from the people, that is what they do. We try to help them every day but we can't with the government's lousy policies.

Mr. Lewis: Does the Premier feel his government collapsing around him?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

SERVICE STATION OPERATING HOURS

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Is the minister aware that Texaco Canada Ltd. is cancelling the lease of an operator of one of its stations in the Windsor area who refuses to operate on a 24-hour basis? He presently operates from 7:30 a.m. until 11 p.m. and the company insists that he continue to operate in spite of the fact that he is losing money on his operations from 11 o'clock until 7:30 in the morning. If the minister is not aware of it, will he make himself aware of the situation and act expeditiously, as the contract or the lease is being cancelled as of April 30?

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of this particular matter referred to by the hon. member. I'm invited to act expeditiously, and I would request some advice from the hon. member if he can tell me what authority we have to act.

Mr. B. Newman: Under the franchising legislation that the minister intends to—or that he may have today.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister, when is he going to introduce legislation which will prevent this type of abuse?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Why don't the members get together over there?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, the members of the opposition parties are aware, as I hope my own people are too, that there has been a franchising study completed.

I question very seriously how government can interfere with contractual relationships between a landlord and a tenant on a lease deal relating to the gasoline outlets in this province. If hon. members have any suggestions as to how we might assist both parties, they would be more than welcome to discuss them with me. But it is a difficult thing, and when government starts to interfere with very singular and individual contracts relating to gasoline vendors and their lessees, I don't know just how one would approach it unless one took over the whole industry.

Mr. Deacon: Further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister examine the legislation introduced in Alberta where a bill of rights between tenants and oil companies has been in force and is apparently working quite successfully and will he also examine the private member's bill under my name with regard to the pricing of gasoline products?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to look at both of the documents referred to by the hon. member for York Centre and I'm advised that the situation in Alberta, contrary to what he has stated, is not working as well as they had anticipated.

It is somewhat interesting to note that there is only a small number of independent lessee dealers in Ontario today.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

CHARGES FOR USE OF CROWN LANDS

Mr. Stokes: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. In view of the kite flying that he's been doing in recent months concerning the possibility of imposing a fee for the use of Crown lands, particularly for nonresidents, does he propose to bring in legislation during this term to deal with that particular subject, and if so, will he exempt Ontario residents from those Crown dues?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, if I may just review for a moment the problems related with the Crown land situation—particularly in northern Ontario where we have a number of nonresidents and residents using the Crown lands and desecrating the countryside in the various areas—we made a suggestion, at least I made one to the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce, whereby we would zone specific areas at the local level and the suggestion was that there be a resident fee and a nonresident fee.

We asked for public participation and we invited the members of the Legislature, of course, to give us their input. That input is now before us. We're studying it, and I can assure the member for Thunder Bay that it's not my intention, after listening to the general public, as responsive as we are on this side of the government, not to impose a resident fee. We are still examining the possibility of zoning and the imposition of a fee to the nonresidents, but that decision has not been reached as yet.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Foulds: Out of curiosity, does the government need legislation to introduce such a fee, or can it do that through regulation?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, we can do that through regulation.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

MERCURY TASK FORCE

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. In view of the fact that the task force on mercury pollution recommended providing an alternate food source to the Indians on the two reserves affected; and in view of the fact that another task force, or study group that he set up for short-term and long-term planning, is obviously going to take some time before it's operative; does the minister not feel that his ministry, or some ministry of the government, should be providing the Indians with an alternate source of food until some long range plan can be drawn up that will solve the problem?

I might ask a second question while I'm on my feet, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not feel that the tourist camps in the area that are operating on the polluted waters should be shut down, especially in view of the fact they are advertising to their American guests that really there isn't much of a mercury problem and that the fish are edible?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker: dealing with the first part of the member's question, I would say to him that we're going to enter some very serious discussions with the federal government. As he is aware, I'm sure, this is a federal reserve and has a certain federal jurisdiction. In my statement I made a point of mentioning that we would make available, and would provide access to, other lakes that are not polluted in the adjacent areas of the reserves.

Mr. Reid: The minister knows that's not going to work.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well, where they can go and fish; they can go and get their resource there.

Mr. Reid: The minister has lived in the north long enough to know that is idiotic.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm sure this will be acceptable. If the federal government wants to contribute and enter into a food bank, which the member is suggesting, then certainly we would be glad to sit down and talk with them.

In connection with closing down the tourist camps, my colleague, the Minister of Health, made it clear in his statement that the course he was following, and which the government was going to follow, would be to notify the residents of that immediate area and all the tourists coming into the area that it was not right that they should eat fish from the area and that it may be hazardous to their health. It's not the intention of the government to close down tourist camps.

MEMO ON ELECTRICIANS IN PROPERTY MANAGEMENT BRANCH

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Minister of Government Services, Mr. Speaker. Why did the minister take no action in connection with the confidential memorandum, prepared by his property management branch on March 27, 1973, informing him that all the electricians were resigning because, quote: "It is apparent that the rates of pay paid to this trade are not sufficiently attractive to enable us to retain staff"?

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of such a confidential memorandum.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Typed in the member's own office again, eh?

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Who is the memo from?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asked me to obtain further information with respect to the Hydro building. I have a letter here, which I wish to table, from the chairman of Hydro.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Has it got copies of the other bids?

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Clement presented the annual report of the office of the Registrar General for the year ending Dec. 31, 1972; and the annual report of the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario for the year ending March 31, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading upon motion:

Bill 96, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor is standing by for Royal assent.

ROYAL ASSENT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald (Lieutenant Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed certain bills to which, in the name of and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill 73, An Act to amend the Trustee Act.

Bill 74, An Act to amend the Fatal Accidents Act.

Bill 75, An Act to amend the Commissioners for taking Affidavits Act.

Bill 82, An Act to amend the Devolution of Estates Act.

Bill 83, An Act to amend the Surrogate Courts Act.

Bill 93, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Bill 96, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Bill Pr1, An Act respecting Aradco Management Ltd. and Oak Stamping Ltd.

Bill Pr2, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the East York Foundation.

Bill Pr6, An Act respecting Simcoe and Erie General Insurance Co.

Bill Pr7, An Act respecting Reliable Life Insurance Co.

Bill Pr. 8, An Act respecting Constitution Insurance Co. of Canada.

Bill Pr9, An Act respecting the Town of Orangeville.

Bill Pr10, An Act respecting the Village of Glencoe.

Bill Pr11, An Act respecting the Borough of Scarborough.

Bill Pr.14, An Act respecting the Town of Espanola.

Bill Pr15, An Act respecting Bridge St. United Church Foundation.

Bill Pr16, An Act respecting the Tillson Spur Line Railway Co.

Bill Pr18, An Act respecting the Town of Tillsonburg.

Bill Pr19, An Act respecting the County of Bruce.

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to retire from the chamber.

Clerk of the House: The 16th order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 98, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

RETAIL SALES TAX ACT (continued)

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to Bill 98, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

There really is very little one could say concerning this legislation that has not been said by other speakers. However, because of the import of the legislation I think that on this side of the House we have to keep emphasizing to the government and to the people of Ontario that simply because the government did retreat from the imposition of the energy tax portion of this bill, that that was simply a smokescreen; that the taxes by means of the sales tax are not being increased by two percentage points but by 40 per cent.

It is an increase from five cents to seven cents, which is a 40 per cent increase in taxes. The public have not been made aware of this to the extent that they should have been, as a result of the proposed sales tax on energy.

However, one thought, Mr. Speaker, is that when Prometheus gave fire to man from the heights of Mount Olympus, man would at least have energy that he would not be taxed on. However, this government saw fit to impose this seven per cent sales tax on energy and only withdrew that tax as sort of a deathbed repentance.

However, the bill as presented in front of us does include that portion on the energy tax; and as a result I would assume, Mr. Speaker, that we are at liberty to make a few comments on it.

Mr. Speaker, the 40 per cent increase in the sales tax makes one wonder whether it is the philosophy of the Conservative Party over there, because of the numbers of people on family benefits and receiving welfare, from whom it is not able to collect any type of income tax, to look on the tax as a source of revenue by which the government can minimize or lessen the amount of disposable income to these unfortunate people who have to accept welfare benefits and have to accept different family benefits; that the imposition of a sales tax is another avenue by which it could get funds from these people, lower their standard of living, and—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Is it possible to do that? It is so low now.

Mr. B. Newman: —increase the extent of poverty they are presently suffering.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): That is their thinking over there.

Mr. B. Newman: Practically everyone who has spoken prior to my comments has made mention of the regressive nature of the imposition of a sales tax. You know, one per cent is enough, two per cent is twice as bad and five per cent is five times as bad—but when we jump from a five per cent to a seven per cent, Mr. Speaker, one wonders what the thinking really was of the party that has the responsibility of governing this province. A 40 per cent increase in sales tax in one jump is absolutely uncalled for.

The incentives given by the federal government and the improvement in our economy—certainly, Mr. Speaker, shown by all economic analyses—indicates that there was absolutely no need for an imposition of a seven per cent sales tax. With the present buoyant economy the taxes received on a five per cent tax would provide the government with sufficient funds so that there would be no deficit whatsoever. Now, with a seven per cent sales tax, even though the provincial Treasurer (Mr. White) does indicate a deficit for the fiscal year, you can rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that because of his inability to forecast revenues in the past, we will end up with a surplus in the 1973-1974 fiscal year.

There isn't one of us in the House who hasn't received myriads of letters from constituents concerning not only the imposition of the energy tax but also the increase in the sales tax. One only has to look at the letters to the editors in practically any paper throughout the Province of Ontario to see how repugnant in the eyes of the public the 40 per cent increase in the sales tax is to them.

The local council of women in the city of Windsor registered very strong opposition; and we know, Mr. Speaker, that when a council of women does act we generally get some type of reaction on the part of government. They probably were one of the organizations that spearheaded the request for the removal of the energy tax. Were it not for organizations such as theirs and the opposition in this Legislature, I doubt that the government would have acted and withdrawn the seven per cent energy tax.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to read into the record the very short comments of a

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Warwick, in my riding, who state in their communication to me:

One would expect the government to do its bit to combat inflation, but tax increases are inflationary. The unions with muscle will ask for higher wages and the spiral will continue. Government sneaked an inflationary move in on us with the uncalled-for increase in car licence plates. Mr. White has never heard about thrift or economy.

One can see the reaction of one individual, who happens to be living on a retirement allowance, to the imposition of the seven per cent sales tax.

Another letter from a Mr. James W. Barlow in my riding says:

Anything you can do to protest the sales tax. It's about time a halt takes place in the ever-expanding expenditures of our government. I am looking forward to the day when I can decide to spend my money in those areas I find the need, without some other agency doing it for me.

The anti-poverty organizations, in their original protests and in the wires they sent around to all members of the Legislature, did not specifically mention the extension of the tax to energy, but the first line in their telegram addressed to the Premier was:

THE PROPOSED INCREASE IN THE RETAIL SALES TAX FROM FIVE PER CENT TO SEVEN PER CENT AND THE EXTENSION OF THE TAX TO HOME LIGHTING AND HEATING ARE VIGOROUSLY CONDEMNED BY THE ONTARIO ANTI-POVERTY COALITION.

Mr. Speaker, they do know the effect of taxes on the bare funds that they have at their disposal. And as we all know, sales tax is an additional bar and an additional impediment when it comes to the amount of disposable income that an individual has. There's two per cent less now at the disposal of those who are in the poverty or near-poverty bracket.

One of the previous speakers did mention the big lobby conducted by the Automotive Transport Association of Ontario. Their comments certainly indicate that we will be in an inflationary spiral as a result of the increase in the sales tax from five per cent to seven per cent. I am going to read only one small paragraph, from the communication dated April 12, 1973, which I assume was sent to all members of the Legislature.

The increase of the sales tax on automotive parts and equipment and the imposition of new levies on electricity and fuel used in terminal operations may affect the cost of goods transportation. Our vehicles depreciate rapidly through constant use and high annual mileage. Their purchase and maintenance absorb a big increase of the revenue dollar in this highly capital-intensive industry.

Members can see that as a result of the additional sales tax, the cost of shipping is going to increase. As soon as the cost of shipping increases, we are going to have the individual wanting salary and wage increases. Those will be given, especially to the unions and organizations which have a lot of muscle and, as a result, the inflationary spiral goes one step higher.

Mr. Speaker, there are more comments I would like to make concerning the imposition of the sales tax. One I would like to bring to the attention of the minister—and I would assume it has been brought to his attention by even his own backbenchers—is that as a result of this imposition of the sales tax, he is going to find that, with many labour contracts coming up for negotiation this year, there will be an increase approximately of two per cent in their requests for additional indemnities. Wage increase requests will be two per cent more than otherwise.

These wage increase requests—and they are going to be successful—are going to lead to price increases. The price increases are going to lead to additional wage increases. This is all well and good for the individuals who are in some fairly strong organization. It will not affect us but think of the many senior citizens who are living on an extremely fixed income—on minimal incomes in many cases—who now will have to pay two per cent more for everything they purchase other than food.

Mr. Speaker, to show the hunger of this government for funds, even the crippled, the incapacitated, those who have to wear various types of prostheses, are taxed. The five per cent tax now goes to seven per cent. I mentioned to one of the ministers by communication that the prosthesis required for an individual who has a mastectomy operation will be taxable at the seven per cent level, increased from the five per cent level. Surely in cases like this the sales tax could be eliminated completely.

Living as I do in a border town, until this time the difference between the sales taxes in the State of Michigan and the Province of Ontario was only one per cent. It is four per cent in the State of Michigan; it is five per cent in the Province of Ontario. Now we will increase that spread to three per cent—from four per cent in Michigan to seven per cent in Ontario.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Isn't that the least happy place to live—downtown Detroit?

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): It's a good place!

Mr. B. Newman: I am going to suggest to the minister that now Canadians will be going over to the State of Michigan—

Mr. G. W. Walker (London North): They will have to pay Detroit sales tax.

Mr. B. Newman: —who, before, may have hesitated to make any types of purchases there because there was only the one per cent difference; now they may not hesitate as much. There is a saving of three per cent to them, and if it's an article that could be up to $100 in value—

Mr. Walker: What about the Detroit sales tax?

Mr. B. Newman: I beg the member's pardon?

Mr. Walker: What about the Detroit sales tax?

Mr. B. Newman: It's only four per cent, that's all.

Mr. Walker: But that's on top of the Michigan tax.

Mr. B. Newman: No, not at all. Not at all.

Hon. Mr. White: Maybe the member had better go over that.

Mr. B. Newman: And the Canadian dollar is discounted. Even with its discount over there at times—occasionally it is at par—the Treasurer is indirectly asking the Ontario resident or the Canadian resident not to hesitate to make his purchases in the State of Michigan because it is to his financial advantage to buy there.

Hon. Mr. White: I have looked at the Detroit model personally and I have decided that there are better models around than Detroit's.

Mr. Spence: He should go over there.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, if he doesn't go to Detroit he should go outside Detroit to one of the shopping malls; or he may go somewhere else in the State of Michigan. All I am trying to point out to the minister is that he has increased the advantage to the individual who wishes to shop in the State of Michigan. Now he has a three per cent advantage in shopping over there.

Hon. Mr. White: I heard on the radio that they are all coming over to Windsor to pay 79 cents for hamburger instead of $1.19.

Mr. B. Newman: We would like to see them all over shopping in the Windsor area, but not everybody does that. There are still sufficient numbers who cross over into the United States and the minister knows that full well. If he doesn't know that, then he is putting his head in the sand.

Hon. Mr. White: I heard on the radio a week ago that all of the Detroiters are coming over to buy 79 cent hamburger in Windsor instead of paying $1.19 in Detroit. My budget is going to bring down ever further the relative price of hamburger in Windsor by transferring resources to the rural sector.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville has the floor; proceed.

Mr. B. Newman: What the minister did mention is true to a certain degree only. That is only food. That's only meat. The minister doesn't talk about electronic equipment that is cheaper over there generally than back home, and about cigarettes, tobacco, and other miscellaneous items that an individual would have to purchase in his normal course of operating a home. All he has done is increase the advantage and the incentive to the Canadian who wishes to go over there.

Mr. Spence: They make such great hamburger over there.

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member doesn't want to misinform the House. Under section 5, subsection 30 of the Retail Sales Tax Act, artificial limbs, orthopaedic appliances, and equipment designed for the use of blind persons, crippled or chronic invalids have been exempt for years.

Mr. B. Newman: Does that include prostheses for mastectomies?

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): No.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, there you are. This is why I have pointed it out to the minister.

Mrs. Campbell: That's why none are made.

An hon. member: The minister is trying to mislead the House.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the minister may go over and ask his specialists out there and find out if I am right or am I wrong.

Hon. Mr. White: I don't think one wears a prostheses with a vasectomy.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): That is not what he said.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the minister's mind is at the present time, but I am very serious in my comments on prostheses for mastectomies. If the minister thinks I am wrong in saying there is a sales tax imposed on them, I will be glad to withdraw my comments. My information is that unless it is under a doctor's prescription, and I may even be wrong with that comment, there is the sales tax. It is only this last week that I requested of the minister's department the information on that. The minister is telling us in this House now that there is no sales tax on these prostheses for mastectomies.

Hon. Mr. White: I thought the member said vasectomies.

Mr. B. Newman: Even though I am looking at the fellows over there, I am not interested in that type of a comment.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): They don't need a vasectomy over there. They are working so hard.

Mr. B. Newman: I'll drop the topic, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: Good for the member.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, all I was trying to point out to the minister is that, by increasing the sales tax to seven per cent, he has induced Canadians who wish to shop in the States to go over there and shop, because there's an advantage of three per cent in doing this. I am not saying they will do it but there is the added incentive for doing it.

Mr. Speaker, this government is supposed to have been a government that listens. If it listened to the people on the seven per cent energy tax, now listen to the people also on the seven per cent sales tax. Reduce the sales tax to five per cent. Just as the government said it was a victory for democracy when it eliminated the energy tax, now let it be a second victory for democracy by eliminating that additional two cents on the dollar on the sales tax and keeping it at least at the five per cent level. With a five per cent sales tax the Treasurer will still raise sufficient funds to keep the Province of Ontario in a non-deficit position. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate on this particular bill, like everyone else who has spoken before me, I can only suggest that the government has flipped its lid. I don't want to give him credit where credit isn't due, but I don't think that the Treasurer, or anyone else over there, thought they could impose a retail sales tax on energy and then withdraw it really to cover up the two per cent they were trying to put on the retail sales tax itself on goods and commodities. I don't give the government that much credit. It was a goof. If the Treasurer could have got away with it he would have reaped those benefits as well and had a balanced budget.

I am disappointed in the Tory backbenchers, Mr. Speaker, because they accepted some pressure from their constituents, and justifiably so, on the retail sales tax on energy. That will be less, or would have been less, in dollar terms per household than the two per cent tax that the government is going to increase now on retail sales tax. Every Tory knows it, and there is not one who has the courage to get up and say it. They can sit there and squirm and wriggle in their seats, but they all know that the two per cent sales tax is much greater to the individual household than was the seven per cent on gasoline, oil, and so on. They are bought off rather cheaply. They are bought off very, very cheaply.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): We weren't bought off at all.

Mr. Martel: When they are willing to accept that little bit of crumb for the people they represent, then in fact the principle wasn't very high. I can't help but oppose a tax credit on this basis on the two per cent, or any tax, because those people on fixed incomes—and I am going to show members some of their incomes in a moment—are the people who can least afford it. A one-day feast a year and the rest a famine in reality is what they have got.

What does a person do on family benefits, or a single person, crippled, mentally retarded, or blind, whose income per month is $78, plus a maximum of $57 for a room? Under the new rates as of January of this year that is a total of $135 a month. Who in God's name is going to be more affected in the Province of Ontario than the blind, the physically disabled and the handicapped? In the first place, they cannot get a room for $57 a month anywhere, so they are into that $78 very quickly just to cover their rent. Over and above that they will now be paying seven per cent tax for clothes. They just don't have the money left for clothing.

There isn't one of the government members who will have the courage to get up and say it. Let's say there are two people, with the husband disabled, in the Province of Ontario, the land of opportunity, the place of the brave, or any other nonsense you want to add.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): The land of Tories.

Mr. Martel: They are allowed $125 a month if the husband happens to be crippled or blind—$125 a month and they will be paying the seven per cent. That's the group that's going to be affected. Where are all the courageous Tories today? I'm not sure if any of them sleep very comfortably at night. I would suspect it doesn't bother most of them because they are not in that position.

Mr. Germa: They've got thick skins.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): And skulls.

Mr. Martel: They're not in that position. And neither are the people who helped draft the budget. I guess when you look in the public accounts at some of their salaries they won't feel it either. But $125 with $90 rental allowance—how are they going to make it; and what good is the tax credit to them come next year? They have to eat every day.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: And the Treasurer once again has bowed out of the picture. I think I should just adjourn the debate at this time, Mr. Speaker, until the Treasurer returns.

I'm moving the adjournment of the debate until we see the face of the Treasurer. Oh, he's come back. Well fine, we won't move the adjournment of the debate. I just don't feel like making my comments without him.

I want to elicit some replies from the minister on the crippled and the mentally retarded, based on the $125 a month given by the Province of Ontario. What good is the tax credit on $125 to them come next year?

Hon. Mr. White: They will be getting a tax credit this month or next.

Mr. Martel: That is for last year, on their housing.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes.

Mr. Martel: Right!

Hon. Mr. White: One hundred dollars each and next year it will be $240.

Mr. Martel: That's if they don't starve first. That's if they don't starve in the process. Is the Treasurer aware of what a single person in Ontario gets? Let him tell me! What does a single, crippled person in Ontario get today?

Hon. Mr. White: I am not going to debate in the field of the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle).

Mr. Martel: Oh, don't bring the red herring into it.

I was here last night when the Treasurer said he knew everything that was going on this past week in Ottawa. So he must know it. He gets $78, Mr. Speaker, $78; and he gets $57 for a room. How does he live when he's the first one hit with the seven per cent?

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): That will be a sizable credit.

Mr. Martel: What good is a credit going to do him next year?

Hon. Mr. White: He will be getting a credit this month.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The Treasurer makes that much in a day.

Mr. Martel: How much? He gets $2 a day to live on—or $2.50. And every article he buys is seven per cent. And where does he get accommodation? He's allowed $57 a month rent. Where does he get accommodation for $57? He's into that $78. The Treasurer knows it and I know it—and he's lucky if he's got $60 a month left to live on. He is going to pay, or she is going to pay, seven per cent; and the Treasurer has got no way to overcome it.

Hon. Mr. White: For every nickel he pays he gets a dollar. Tell the truth: For every nickel a poor man pays he gets a dollar. Of course, his consumption of taxable goods is very small—

Mr. Lewis: What does the Treasurer mean?

Mr. Martel: He has nothing left.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Let them eat cake—that's the Treasurer's attitude.

Hon. Mr. White: Much of what he buys is exempt from sales tax.

Mr. Martel: He has nothing to buy; isn't that what the Treasurer is saying?

Mr. Lewis: Those were cooked up tables—$700 a year for families—

Hon. Mr. White: The misrepresentation in this debate is just astonishing.

Mr. Lewis: We haven't got to the Treasurer yet. We will continue at it.

Mr. Martel: You can go to a family of four living under the great largess in this province and see if they aren't suffering. And they can wait for the tax credit, can't they?

An hon. member: They don't eat.

Mr. Martel: They don't eat either. They don't need clothes for their kids. With an Ontario family of let's say three children, there is $168 if there is one parent, $209 with two parents—plus $100 rent. Now what's left? What good is a tax credit to them?

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order! The hon. member is now debating the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Renwick: No he isn't.

Mr. Cassidy: No he is not.

Hon. Mr. White: The reason for the meetings taking place in Ottawa between the ministers of welfare is because of dissatisfaction about the existing schedules. I think it is not helpful for him to debate this matter in the absence of the responsible minister.

Mr. Lewis: The member is saying that people live from day to day.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order then, Mr. Speaker. As I hear the member, what he is saying is that people in this province live and function from day to day and can't wait for the Treasurer's blessed tax pittance credit once a year. That's what the member for Sudbury East is saying.

Mr. Martel: That is precisely what I said. If the Treasurer had been here when I started instead of taking one of his—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Well, I didn't understand it until the leader explained it.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East is wandering from the subject.

Mr. Lewis: Not at all. The Treasurer doesn't like to hear this kind of stuff.

Mr. Speaker: If he relates it back to Bill 98, we will let him proceed.

Mr. Stokes: Don't be so hard.

Mr. Martel: I did not wander one iota, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest of respect, you sat and listened and you knew full well what I was talking about. The minister wasn't even in his place. This is nothing unusual. He can't even face this bill. He's had to run and hide in a corner many times.

Hon. Mr. White: I took an urgent call from northern Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: I gather he did.

Mr. Martel: We'll talk about northern Ontario; I'm coming to that too.

Mr. Lewis: We are not going to accept anything in this bill.

Mr. Martel: I just want to set out what this government is doing as well as the fact that there isn't one of its backbenchers who wants to accept the fact that people in this province eat daily, need clothes daily and need the benefits of life daily, and that a tax credit at the end of the year is immaterial.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Mr. Martel: Many of them will die in the process.

An hon. member: There are only seven backbenchers here.

Mr. Martel: My friend, the vice-chairman of Hydro, sits smiling at the back as we make those comments. I challenge him to go out and live for—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The member for Sudbury East is out of order. Now get back to Bill 98.

Mr. Martel: I'm right on.

Mr. Lewis: He is not out of order. He is pointing out that we pay more—

Mr. Martel: I'm right on the bill. I'm talking about how this two per cent will affect those poor people who are not in a position to meet this added expense—and the minister knows it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows he is not speaking to the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: For every nickel they pay they will get a dollar.

Mr. Martel: Yes, if they live between now and then.

Hon. Mr. White: The NDP have copped out. They get nothing from the union bosses.

Mr. Martel: Talk about generosity! The blind, the handicapped and those who are over age 60 are hit by this extra two per cent—more so even than we hear his friend in Ottawa prating about.

Mr. Lewis: What is that stuff about a nickel and a dollar?

Mr. Martel: He prates about needing more for the senior citizens—and I'm not disputing that for a moment—but they get $35 to $40 more than those in Ontario who are 60 years of age or over and can't work. And the government sits there. They should be proud of themselves.

It just boggles the mind to try to suggest that people can exist until they get these tax credits. Maybe if the government gave it to them ahead of time it might work; then they could allot two cents every time they went out to buy something. They could take two cents out of a jar and add it to it if we gave it to them in advance.

And why this tax anyway? I want to refer to page 31 of the Treasurer's budget statement, where he is talking about future policy on taxation of resource industries. He says we've got to "maintain the total tax burden on the mining industry approximately at its present level." What is its present level?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Be sure to include everything.

Mr. Martel: "Leo the Lion" made the same statement in a speech recently too. He said: "Nor can we in Ontario assume, as some have suggested, that we can continue to load the mining industry with tax and other basic costs of refining." What a lot of prattle!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Look what's going to happen in British Columbia. They had it.

Mr. Martel: Without a doubt, the members of this government are not for real. They're just not for real. They've never looked at it, have they? Has the minister looked at the annual reports of the Ministry of Natural Resources to find out what the production is in mining and what the tax is in mining in this province? The public accounts for 1972 show that the then Department of Mines and Northern Affairs had general revenue of $16 million. That's $16 million in provincial tax. And what was produced—$1,521,415,000 worth of mineral production. And we got $16 million in provincial tax!

Hon. Mr. White: Better add the corporation tax and the income tax.

Mr. Martel: I'll come to that. Just wait. I'm going to come to that one.

That's what the provincial tax was on $1,521,415,000 worth of production. And the provincial tax was $16 million!

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): And the Treasurer assured them the other day, "Not a dime more, gentlemen."

Hon. Mr. White: "Not a dime less," was the assurance.

Mr. Martel: Is the Treasurer aware that if one calculates what we got from provincial mining tax last year on his predecessor's budget, it represents one-third of one per cent of the Ontario budget for last year?

Hon. Mr. White: Plus corporation taxes, plus capital gains tax—

Mr. Martel: No. I'll come to the—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: I'm going to come to the corporation tax. Don't get excited.

Mr. Lawlor: Precious little on that too with their depletion allowances, depreciation allowance and the various types of allowances he gives them gratis.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Maybe the members would let the member for Sudbury East speak—that's including the minister too.

Mr. Lewis: He's doing fine. He doesn't mind a little interrupting.

Mr. Martel: One-third of one per cent. That's what he builds an economy on, is it? That's what he builds an industrial nation on? One-third of one per cent of the budget?

For the goods and services that we need in the north and so on—one-third of one per cent of the budget is financed through natural resources, the mining industry.

Hon. Mr. White: Look at our unemployment rate in Ontario compared to Manitoba.

Mr. Martel: I can tell the Treasurer what the unemployment rate is in Sudbury. That's a red herring.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That is not the same.

Mr. Stokes: I can show him many areas in northern Ontario where the unemployment rate is 90 per cent!

Mr. Martel: I can show him Cornwall. I can show him—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Martel: I can show him areas of the province where unemployment is 20 per cent.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) will tell the Treasurer that. He's got 20 per cent and has had for 3½ years.

Worry about Ontario? I'm talking about money—

Hon. Mr. White: Where is the standard of living the highest in the world?

Mr. Martel: Yes?

Hon. Mr. White: Right here in Ontario.

Mr. Martel: They tell me—

Hon. Mr. White: According to one of the economists.

Mr. Martel: Well, they tell me it's fifth in the world.

Mr. Stokes: What is the unemployment rate at Sandy Lake or Sachigo?

Mr. Cassidy: That's not a high standard of living.

Mr. Martel: The latest I've read said that we rank No. 5. But that's all a red herring. The minister doesn't want to listen.

Mr. Lawlor: The standard of living in Zurich is terribly high. I don't think we reach it.

Hon. Mr. White: The highest standard of living in the world is right here in Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: That is typical of the economists.

Mr. Lawlor: Is he in the Treasurer's pay, this particular guy? They will say anything if you pay them enough.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, in 1972, as I indicated, we got $16 million, or one per cent of the value of mineral production. We had that type of income for years and we've got the statements by "Leo the lollipop" and the Treasurer—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Okay, Gomer Pyle.

Mr. Martel: —saying that they in fact don't want to tax them too much. In fact, I know why he says that. He is afraid of industry. For example, Henry S. Wingate recently made a statement about Manitoba. By the way, they are now paying about 2.4 cents on the dollar in Manitoba, as was reported in the Toronto Star just recently; 2.3 cents it is, on the value of mineral production on the dollar. That's a great amount, isn't it?

Mr. Renwick: How much does Henry Wingate make a year now?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Yes. It says here in a recent editorial of the Toronto Star: "Assuming the return in Ontario is roughly the same, a reasonable assumption given the similar pattern of fees and taxes, Ontario last year got back $28 million total." In other words, the federal income tax—and we want to come to that one; where this government has been screaming it has no room to move—returns less to this province on its 12 points than the province gets from the provincial tax. Less.

In 1968, on a total value of mineral production, Ontario's share was in the neighborhood of $16,334,000 and from the federal government we got back $14 million.

If the government wants room to move that's the place to move into. But it won't. That indicates a total return to Ontario of 2.26 cents for every dollar of mineral production in the Province of Ontario. That's what came back to us in total tax revenues from the mining industry.

That's very similar to Manitoba where they get 2.3. But we have had better years. We have had better years. In fact, in 1967 we got 0.89—not even one per cent—and that was the banner year, the first year we broke the $1 billion mark.

Mr. Lawlor: The mining industry has been working toward that ever since. That was the peak.

Mr. Martel: They broke the $1 billion mark and they had a rocket on the front of their book. We finally broke the $1 billion mark, and that year, on $1,192,000, we got $10 million tax in the province, or 0.89 per cent.

Mr. Lawlor: It's scandalous!

Mr. Martel: Point-eight-nine per cent.

Mr. Renwick: Those mine assessors are really terrific.

Mr. Martel: Yes. They should fire that whole crappy department.

Mr. Lawlor: They really work overtime, those fellows.

Mr. Martel: Point-eight-nine, Mr. Minister. If we want to go down through the years very quickly on provincial tax alone in the mining area, from 1966 on—I bothered to look it up—$14,800,000 in 1966, on almost $1 billion dollars of production; 1967, as I said, the banner year when they finally broke the $1 billion mark. It was seen in the magazine or the annual report.

Hon. Mr. White: No thanks to the member.

Mr. Martel: No. What did Ontario get on $1.192 billion of mineral production? Our share, in provincial tax was $10,640,000 or 0.89 per cent.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, boy!

Mr. Stokes: The government actually pays them to take it away.

Mr. Martel: Why not just close it down?

Mr. Lawlor: Of course the minister has nothing to say.

Mr. Martel: The Treasurer can go back and take a 40 per cent increase on every citizen of this province, but he won't go back here and get a chunk of the action, will he? No way.

An hon. member: No.

Mr. Lawlor: He's only the Treasurer. Don't bother him. That's in the Minister of Natural Resources' hands; he's got control of that. He wouldn't let the Treasurer touch it.

Mr. Martel: Right.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There are pretty wild statements coming from that side of the House.

Mr. Renwick: That is a concrete factual statement. The minister wouldn't recognize it.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect, the figures I have are right from the last seven years of the mining report.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Take the blinkers off and see what is happening in the mining industry.

An hon. member: The member for Sudbury East keeps saying the same thing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Sure, because it doesn't sink in.

An hon. member: The same old record always there; he never stops.

Mr. Renwick: Now the government is going to give in to the pulp and paper industry.

Mr. Foulds: It is a restatement for the Tory backbenchers who condescend to show up.

Mr. Renwick: It is the right story and they know it.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, the highest the government ever extracted in provincial tax from the industry was 1.5 per cent. That was 1971.

An hon. member: That was for all the fruits of their industry.

Mr. Martel: Then it dropped to 1.05 per cent last year on mineral production.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Somebody has to be responsible.

Mr. Martel: I know what the minister is going to say. What about the other tax? I only have 1968 and some figures from Eric Kierans. But 1968 provincial and federal—the whole bag—we got about $30 million. That represented 2.26 per cent on every dollar of production. That's what is going on in Manitoba; that's why the Eric Kierans report. In Manitoba, they now get 2.3 cents for every dollar of mineral production.

That's the whole total tax picture. That's what it is in Ontario. The government is afraid to look at it, because it is afraid of people like Henry S. Wingate.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh, no!

Mr. Martel: When he was chastising Manitoba for increasing it, Henry S. Wingate made the following statement:

Regrettably, the Manitoba government during the year made effective increased income tax rates and enacted an increase in its mining royalty tax. This means that individuals and industry in Manitoba are paying the highest income taxes and that effective mining royalty taxes are amongst the highest in Canada.

That wouldn't be hard to beat, to be higher than anything in Canada. He said:

Such high taxation can only deter new mining investment and expansion in the province.

That is the big threat. They hold a big club over the government. Rather than tax them, the government says, "Go ahead, boys, holler out. We don't mind a one per cent return."

But the government can turn around and it can put two per cent on the people right across the board—the poor, the near-poor and the middle income. It can put two per cent on them, or a 40 per cent increase, and it won't even look at it. By the way, do members know what Henry S. Wingate's salary was in 1970? It was $360,000.

Mr. Renwick: What's his pension now that he's kicked out?

Mr. Martel: It's kind of tough for him to struggle.

Mr. Lawlor: He has a right to talk!

Hon. Mr. White: What tax does he pay?

Mr. Martel: He used to take it in stock options.

Mr. Renwick: He spends most of it in New York.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: He is a little overpaid!

Mr. Renwick: He spends most of it in New York because he runs a company down there.

Mr. Foulds: Plus his expense account.

Mr. Renwick: He gets paid in United States dollars for selling out the ore body of Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: How much retail sales tax does he pay?

Mr. Foulds: He doesn't buy anything.

Mr. Martel: What does he buy?

We talked about where the Treasurer can move in. I just want to quote one figure.

Mr. Lawlor: He also spends a good deal of time in the Bahamas.

Mr. Martel: The minister has always stated—and I have listened and I've read his speeches, both his and his predecessors—that they went to Ottawa—

Mr. Renwick: Where does the president of Inco live that the Premier is taking with him.

Mr. Martel:—and they had no room to move. I'm just going to quote one figure, and this will show the Treasurer where he has room to move in the Natural Resources field. Nearly $500 million of the profits of metal mining companies and nearly $400 million of the profits of oil and gas producers were untouched by federal income tax in 1969.

Mr. Foulds: Untouched!

Mr. Martel: Untouched! This was not an unusual year for these two sectors. For the four years 1965-1968 the corporations paid taxes on 13 per cent—that is the mining—and 5.7 per cent—that is oil—13 per cent on minerals—of their profits respectively.

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): Was that federal?

Mr. Martel: Federal. That gives this province the right to move in on that area and if the government doesn't want to do it, as Kierans eventually gets around to saying, it is afraid to take the companies on. The last figure: Leaving approximately $1,500 million of mining profits and $750 million of oil and gas profits free from corporate income tax from 1965 to 1968; and the same goes on.

Mr. Rhodes: Are those national figures?

Mr. Martel: Those are national figures.

Mr. Rhodes: Make that clear.

Mr. Martel: I don't want to mislead anyone. I am saying that in four years there is $1.5 billion of profit in metal mining, and there was no tax on that amount of profit. If this province and if this Treasurer were sincere in wanting to move in a tax area to have room—and I have heard him say he needed room to move—there is the area to move in on. It is not on the residents of Ontario but it is on those beggars who have never paid, and the minister can use all the red herring he wants.

In fact, it is interesting—I go back to one of my favourite companies; I have a lot of love for them—in 1971, I hope the Treasurer hears this because it shows who pays the share of tax, Inco made $210 million and $94 million of it was clear profit. When it came to paying income tax the government declined and said, "Don't pay us; we will pay you."

On a clear profit of $94 million not a single cent was collected in income tax while the government in 1971 gave Inco a tax credit of $2,800,000.

By comparison, the non-corporate citizens of Sudbury—the people the Treasurer is taxing today—in that year he will recall, were earning an average $7,530 per worker. They paid income taxes at the rate of 25 per cent of taxable income. The mining industry paid nothing in that area and our total tax in the province for 1971 from mining was $25 million.

Out of that, Inco didn't pay any to Ontario because it didn't pay any corporation tax in the federal field. We have a return to the province of 1.5 per cent.

I suggest to the minister in winding up, Mr. Speaker, that if he needs revenue—and he claims he does; I am not sure; I am not going to argue that point with him—where to go to get those revenues is from those people who aren't paying. He doesn't go back to the citizens.

I say to the Treasurer, "Have a look to see if, in fact, companies are paying their fair share." I want to know before this debate is over if he thinks $16 million last year is a fair share? I don't think it is. Let him have a look at it and have his tax experts work on it for the whole weekend. They worked all last weekend apparently, or the Treasurer did, in that lost weekend. Let him have a look and if he needs tax dollars then that's where he moves.

I might just indicate how much I think he might be able to extract from those beggars if he had a little bit of courage. They'll threaten to move out; there's no doubt about it.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): How can they move out the ore bodies and smelters?

Mr. Martel: I have no illusions about them not threatening to move out, but—

Mr. Young: They can't take ore bodies with them.

Mr. Martel: The Minister of Natural Resources might give them a big cable and they could drag the mines to the States with them. Or when they're finished with that, they'll open up the ones in Guatemala and in New Caledonia and use our capital to do it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They could leave it in the ground.

Mr. Martel: Yes, leave it! With what they're getting, it might be worthwhile.

Mr. Germa: It's better in the ground.

Mr. Martel: We got one-third of one per cent of last year's budget and one per cent a year.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Let's leave it in the ground.

Mr. Martel: We might include a 15 per cent tax on the value of production, a 10 per cent per ton levy on reserves and a doubling of the present acreage taxes.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Let's leave it in the ground.

Mr. Martel: The minister is so far in the hip pocket of the companies it's not even funny! He hasn't even got the courage to look at it. That whole ministry of his is filled with ex-company flunkies.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Table that speech and say it again six years from now.

Mr. Martel: That's right, the whole ministry.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, it is unfortunate that he has to give it over and over again.

Mr. Martel: That whole ministry of his—

Mr. Deans: Why doesn't the minister listen and do something about it?

Mr. Germa: Why doesn't the minister correct it?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member just isn't making sense.

Mr. Martel: If I'm not making sense I challenge the Minister of Natural Resources—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The NDP's friends in Manitoba did it and where did it get them?

Mr. Martel: I challenge the Minister of Natural Resources to establish an independent committee of economists, free of the flunkies in his ministry, to find out if we're getting our fair share. He hasn't got the guts to do it! Let him put his money where his mouth is.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Look at the member's friends in Manitoba—what did they do in Manitoba?

Mr. Martel: Let him put his money where his mouth is! He is the man who has the power to do it. Let him put his money where his mouth is.

An hon. member: Bring in Eric Kierans.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member for Sudbury East get back to Bill 98 again, please?

Mr. Martel: Well, he provokes me! He provokes me no end because he is so far in the hip pockets—so is that government—of the mining barons. They're robber barons.

Let him establish a committee—if he has the courage—an independent committee of economists to find out if we're getting our fair share. The government just hasn't got the courage to do it, least of all the minister responsible for it.

That's why I think the Treasurer might take that over and get it to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) because it doesn't belong in that department. I beg the minister to reconsider. I ask him to get the money from the source that isn't taxed and relieve the burden on those people who can ill-afford more taxation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my objections to the increase in the sales tax in Bill 98.

Hon. Mr. White: Is the member in favour of the farm package we put in that budget?

Mr. Spence: Will the Treasurer just wait till I get through?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Well, it's improved a little bit since he retracted on the energy tax.

Mr. Spence: That's right. It's been talked about for years and nothing has been done until now; but that was an improvement to the budget. But this sales tax that has been announced in the budget! The tax on energy and fuel created a furore across the province and, Mr. Speaker, with the criticism of my leader and of our financial critic, and the criticism of the NDP and the furore of the people across the province, the Treasurer withdrew that tax, which was a step in the right direction.

Now under Bill 98, he is increasing the sales tax from five to seven per cent, which is a regressive tax. It is an inflationary tax that falls on the rich as well as the low-income people and creates a greater hardship on those who are in the low-income group than it does on the higher-income people. I think it's unfair to the low-income people in this province, and I think there can be and should be other methods or other ways to collect taxes if the government needs them. I think that the sales tax is just a little unfair to those in the low-income bracket.

Mr. Speaker, at the criticism of my leader and our financial critic and the NDP, the minister withdrew the tax on fuel or energy. With this criticism which has been offered on Bill 98, I expect that the Treasurer will withdraw this increase in the sales tax in this province. We hope so anyway.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to re-echo the criticism that has been offered by my colleagues yesterday and today, but there are some points that I would like to bring to the Treasurer's attention—that this sales tax is inflationary and affects the prices of the food that the people of this province eat. I don't think this has been brought out as yet, Mr. Speaker, to this Legislature.

For instance, there is the canning industry in this province. I come from an area where there are tremendous amounts of tomatoes grown, and the farmers enter into a contract with these canning companies to produce tomatoes. The canning companies supply the farmers with hampers. Now, a five per cent sales tax has been paid on these hampers in the past, and also on the cans that are bought by the canning company to be used in the canning of tomatoes.

And also, Mr. Speaker, there is a label which goes on the can, which is another five per cent. So naturally the canning companies add that extra five per cent on the supplies that are needed in the canning industry, and the consumer has to pay it.

Mr. Speaker, I might say too that a few weeks ago we had the ladies of the Province of Ontario protesting the increased price of food. As a small illustration, there is the paper that is used by the butcher to wrap the meat; there was another five per cent sales tax put on that. The butcher, naturally, adds that on to the selling price. And so when you increase the sales tax, naturally it is put on the price to the consumer—and the consumer has to pay it.

So, I think raising the sales tax is very inflationary in the way it affects the people of the Province of Ontario. I think myself that a graduated income tax is a fairer way, if the government is in great need of more revenue. And it falls on those who are most able to pay.

I was very disappointed to understand in this Bill 98—and I didn't read anything about it—that the government is asking the businessmen of this province to collect a sales tax for the government of the Province of Ontario.

Now, we have big businesses who can do that without too much harm. But the small businessman in this province is struggling for existence. And so he has to buy cash registers, he has to give his time in order to create this service for the government of the Province of Ontario.

I think that these small businessmen, or the businessmen of this province, should receive some remuneration for carrying out this service for the government of Ontario. In this day and age, nobody can work for nothing.

I would hope the minister would reconsider, Mr. Speaker, and see that some of the small businessmen be given some remuneration for their work and their efforts in collecting this sales tax, if it goes into force.

I might say that clothing has been taxed in this province. I think that's a hardship. It is hard for me to believe that the government would tax clothing. I would like to see it, if this Act goes into force, exempt clothing; because clothing is as much a need as food, as much a need as heat. I would ask the provincial Treasurer, if he has any heart at all, that clothing for adults in this province be exempted.

Now, there are many other things that I could say in regard to this, but I think the Treasurer should reconsider this. It is an unfair tax. It falls on the little man with greater force than it does on the man in the high income bracket and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer will reconsider this. He did reconsider the tax on energy and fuel and I would expect, after hearing the criticism from every party in this House, that he will do the same thing as he did with the fuel and the energy tax.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think that we should adjourn the debate. I move the ad-jourment until the Treasurer comes back. Perhaps he is lurking in the corridors. In that case he might wish to appear before we take the vote on it. I would so move, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Cassidy moves the adjournment of the debate. All in favour of the—

Mr. Cassidy: I am willing to withdraw it if that spectre coming in is the minister. Yes. I would withdraw my motion then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Drea: Saved by my hand!

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, that's right, I appreciate that, yes, and somebody swiftly running out in order to call in the minister.

Hon. Mr. White: I would like to inform the members that I had to leave the room for a very important purpose.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if that is the minister's problem, we wonder that he absents himself so often.

Mr. Speaker, a number of members have spoken on this side. I want to take up the question of regressivity in the budget, because I don't think that the minister is at all aware of the impact of his budget. He is either ill-advised or else he is showing duplicity to this House in the kind of comments that he has brought before us.

Mr. Speaker, the minister had a number of choices in the budget. He could have raised the income tax if he had to, if he felt that his expenditure and revenue estimates had to be met. We disagree on that.

Mr. Martel: That would have been the fairest place.

Mr. Cassidy: That's correct. It would have been the fairest place and Ontario in fact now has got the lowest rate of income tax in the country.

Mr. Martel: It would hit his financial friends more.

Mr. Cassidy: As the member for Sudbury East mentioned, he could have raised the resources tax. He could have touched the sacred area of corporation tax. But no, Mr. Speaker, he chose once again to hit the ordinary taxpayers of the province.

He hit them with a $340 million sales tax increase and then proceeded to try to explain his way out of it. He is trying to explain that somehow it's not really going to hurt at all, that somehow between the municipal tax credits, the payments to municipalities and the tax credit for sales tax which is being given, that people will be better off than before.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to do some basic arithmetic with the minister. There are about seven million people in this province. His tax will raise $340 million in a full year. That's $50 per person on average of $200 on average for a family of four and that will be paid by individual taxpayers and will not be followed through other parts of the tax system. If he wants to work it out in terms of the population over the age of 15, which accounts for most of the consumption and excludes children, then it is something like $70 to $75 for each and every Ontario resident over the age of 15.

Mr. Speaker, how then does a $28 or a $36 tax credit allowed to families of four or three compensate just for the increase in tax, or just for the tax? How does it even account for the increase? I have some figures here which suggest it will not even do that.

The minister says that sales tax is more progressive than income tax. He said it in the House the other day. I hate to throw Mr. Maslove's book at him again but I have been looking at it with some interest, because frankly the minister is cockeyed and his advisers are cockeyed if they keep on telling him that he can say that kind of thing. The studies which have been done indicate that the sales tax is a regressive tax, that it is a proportionate tax at certain income levels, but then when you get into the levels of income of over $10,000, it is decidedly regressive. In other words, it takes proportionately less from the rich than it does from people on middle incomes, and when you go down below middle incomes you find the incidence of sales tax is the greatest at the very poorest level.

Mr. Speaker, the average incidence of the Ontario sales tax at the present rate, prior to May 1, is about 2.4 per cent. But people earning over $10,000 universally pay less than 2.4 per cent, while people earning under $10,000 universally pay more than that amount. In fact, at $3,000 the sales tax incidence is three per cent of that very small income. By the time we get up to $12,000 it is down to 2.4 per cent, and by the time we get to $15,000 it is 1.8 per cent. Now that is not a progressive tax.

On the other hand, if we look at the income tax, at the lowest income I have just quoted, the tax is about five per cent of income, while up at the highest level it is about 16 per cent. That's not a very progressive tax either, Mr. Speaker, but it is an awful lot better than the tax which takes proportionately more from the poor than it takes from the rich.

I made a calculation here to see what people actually pay. At $3,000 income, they now pay $90 in sales tax, and they will pay approximately $36 more as a result of the 40 per cent tax increase the minister has brought in. A family of three or four just might get enough back to compensate for the increase in sales tax but nothing to compensate for the regressivity of the original tax.

When we get up to the $9,000 level, which isn't a very high level of income in cities like Toronto or Ottawa—one can't afford to buy a house or even to pay the rents being charged in many parts of these cities on that income; it is very difficult to keep family together on that income—but at the $9,000 level people will pay about $234 at the present rate of tax, and they will have another $92 to pay because of the minister's increase.

The minister is pulling out the figures that he passed around to the press; and, Mr. Speaker, those figures are phoney. They make no sense at all. Those figures do not stack up against any other studies that have been done about the amounts that people pay. The minister is asking us to believe that a family with $10,000 of income spends only $1,400 a year on taxable commodities. Now that is very hard to believe. In fact, it is incredible to believe that it would be that little.

The minister ignores that shelter costs include an element of sales tax. Home maintenance costs include an element of sales tax. Grocery store purchases include a substantial element of sales tax on things like soap, cleaning materials, mops and brooms, soda pop for the kids, chocolate bars and all sorts of other items bought at the grocery store. These figures just don't make any sense at all, Mr. Speaker.

Let me just say in connection with tax credits that, according to Maslove's figures, the incidence of sales tax on people in the $3,000 range will go down to 1.8 per cent. And the tax is infinitesimally progressive if we go up to the $6,000, $9,000 and $12,000 ranges, because at those levels about 2.2 per cent of income will be paid on the provincial sales tax at the new rate, including the tax credit. But that is a very mild form of progressivity.

What about the one-third of Ontario families who have incomes of over $12,000? When we come to them we find that the incidence of sales tax on them is only 1.6 per cent with the tax credits and the new rates. And if you recall, Mr. Speaker, 1.6 per cent incidence is a lower rate of tax than is being charged on people earning $3,000 a year. That is ridiculous.

It is a completely regressive tax, Mr. Speaker, and it indicates to us, if I can get beyond these figures, that the minister simply doesn't know the kind of lives that the bulk of the people in the province are leading. The minister says Ontario has the highest standard of living in the world. Well, some Ontarians have a very high standard of living, granted.

Mr. Martel: He is one of them.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is beguiling himself with averages. There are two or 2½ million Ontarians, Mr. Speaker, who have a very low standard of living, many of whom live at below a subsistence level; many of whom are going steadily into debt; many of whom cannot afford to give to their children an adequate diet, adequate clothing or other essentials in order to help their healthy development.

That's what's happening in this supposedly affluent province. If you go to other countries which in theory have a lower standard of living, Mr. Speaker, you will find that they treat their children in their poorest income groups an awful lot better than we do in this supposedly rich province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, the minister said in his budget he wanted to enrich the tax credit system to ensure that the burden of the tax increase will fall on our more prosperous taxpayers. Now when he replies in this debate I wish that he would explain how it is that ensuring the burden of the tax would fall on more prosperous taxpayers entails charging a higher rate of tax to people earning under $10,000 a year, with the sales tax, than the people earning over $10,000 a year. That just doesn't ring true.

The minister also had a rather specious argument in the debate just recently. He said; "For every nickel that low-income families pay, they get a dollar back."

Well, I worked this one out. I took a single taxpayer, with $2,000 income; he'll get $16 back from the minister's tax credit—$16. If they are going to pay a nickel for every dollar they get back, that means that they will pay 80 cents in extra tax to the minister. That means in turn, Mr. Speaker, that that taxpayer earning $2,000 is so close to the subsistence line that he can afford 80 cents a week or $40 a year to buy untaxable items. Taxable items such as soap and toilet paper, suds to do his washing with—there are a number of things in the minister's tax, Mr. Speaker, which are essentials and which are not luxuries and which cannot be avoided and 80 cents a week is all that the minister would allow to be spent on that.

Mr. Martel: Maybe they can eat goldfish.

Mr. Cassidy: Or the other explanation is this. That the minister, dealing in hyperbole, has reckoned that for every dollar of welfare or social assistance a low-income family receives, it will pay a nickel's worth of tax. Maybe that is what he meant.

In that case he was completely irrelevant to the argument being made on this side. He was completely misleading and the minister has been misleading, Mr. Speaker, right through this piece.

Hon. Mr. White: The member has.

Mr. Lewis: Is that what he meant by the dollar-nickel analogy?

Mr. Cassidy: Is that what he meant?

Mr. Lewis: What did he mean by the nickel-dollar reference?

Hon. Mr. White: I will deal with it when my turn comes.

An hon. member: The Treasurer will work on it over the weekend.

Mr. Cassidy: He'll deal with it—okay. Well, the minister puts out erroneous figures which are not to be trusted. The minister launches specious remarks in the House. The minister, against the evidence of Maslove, against the evidence of Orland Nelson in the Canadian Tax Journal and other experts, tries to tell us that the sales tax is more progressive than the income tax. The minister simply does not understand the tax system over which he is—

Hon. Mr. White: I didn't say that.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, he did. Yes, he did.

Mr. Cassidy: It is in Hansard of a couple of days ago.

Hon. Mr. White: Not more progressive—no I didn't. Give me the reference.

Mr. Cassidy: My leader will find the reference; we have treasured it, Mr. Speaker.

I would just like to diverge for a minute to ask who benefits from this, because the minister will undoubtedly get up in the House in a few days when this debate is ending to tell us about the wonderful things he is doing with the revenues being raised by the sales tax.

Mr. Martel: I think he's selling sweaters.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. One of the things he is doing is he is giving only half of that revenue back to the municipalities in an effort to reduce their tax rates by about six per cent.

Here we are. Page 1073 of Hansard, April 17, 1973. The minister interjected:

Oh, come now; the sales tax is not as regressive as a personal income tax.

And that is a direct quote from the minister.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, at no time, in any place, have I ever said the retail sales tax was more progressive than the income tax, because I know it is not. If this interjection of mine has been improperly recorded, I set the record straight now.

What I did say was that the retail sales tax, with the credits, is much more progressive than it was; while the personal income tax, thanks to Mr. Turner's changes, is less progressive than it was—therefore, they now have a comparable degree of progressivity.

Mr. Lewis: It was better the first time. The Treasurer must have said that the first time.

Hon. Mr. White: Look at the budget!

Mr. Lewis: Well, the Treasurer certainly didn't say it in the interjection before.

Mr. Cassidy: So, the minister is saying that the new sales tax is just as progressive as Finance Minister Turner's income tax.

Hon. Mr. White: It's more progressive.

Mr. Cassidy: It's what?

Hon. Mr. White: Our credits make it more progressive; and Mr. Turner's changes in the income tax make it less progressive.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): So, the Treasurer was quoted right in Hansard on the changes?

Mr. Cassidy: The Treasurer is saying that it is more progressive than Mr. Turner's income tax. Those are the words the minister used, I believe. Well, I guess he'll stand on the record on that, Mr. Speaker. It isn't true and, in fact, the federal income tax changes—which were greatly influenced, I might say, by the New Democratic Party—had created much more progressivity in that tax system than has ever existed before—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: —because the benefits of the tax reductions there were directed almost exclusively to people in the income ranges of under $10,000 a year. I just don't know who is advising the minister.

If I can return, let's look at where that $180 million, which is the chief—

Mr. Martel: Is the minister slipping lately?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, he is.

Where is the $180 million for municipalities actually going to wind up? The minister's tables erroneously state that that money is going to go to the homeowner—$15, $25, $70 in property tax reductions.

The implication is that people will get back on the swings what they lose on the roundabouts; that what they pay in extra sales tax they will get in substance, or in large part, back through the property tax; that the device in using a regressive tax increase to combat a regressive tax at the municipal level is justifiable in this province.

Well, I don't know if the minister realizes it, but out of that $180 million benefit to municipalities, and assuming that that was all passed back to the municipalities, more than 40 per cent wouldn't go to homeowners and tenants at all. It would go to businesses and corporations who pay that proportion of the municipal tax.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Mr. Cassidy: And it staggers us that the minister could not have on the precedents of previous holders of his office ensured that all of the benefit of that $180 million went to tenants and to owners and it was not passed back to corporations; that is that a differential tax rate be further introduced from what exists right now.

Then, the second thing is—I don't think the minister is aware of the way in which the rental market works in major cities like Toronto and like Ottawa. In Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, 50 per cent of the people are tenants. I believe the figure is higher here in Toronto. There is not a word in the budget to ensure that the benefit of any municipal tax reductions is passed on to tenants by their landlords. There is not a single word there to ensure that they see the benefit. So, who will get the benefit of that?

An hon. member: Ottawa.

Mr. Cassidy: Who will get the benefit of approximately 50 per cent of what remains from the $180 million the minister is giving municipalities? It will go to the landlords, to the corporate landlords who now dominate the rental market in large cities like Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa. Not only that, but who then will suffer most because tenants will not see any benefit if municipalities decide to cut the tax rates?

Well, the minister may not be aware of it but, in fact, low-income people tend to be tenants; higher-income people tend to be homeowners. High-income people, therefore, will see any benefit of tax reductions passed on by municipalities; lower-income people won't, because they are tenants. And in the tight housing markets that prevail in the major cities of the province, there is absolutely no way that they can compel or persuade their landlords to pass back that $15 or $20 or $25 tax reduction.

Mr. Young: But the landlords will raise rents because of the two per cent.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. We have fortunately avoided the perverse situation where landlords would have raised rents because of the energy tax, while ignoring the fact that they were getting a comparable reduction through the municipal tax cuts if any had actually occurred. We have avoided that kind of perverse situation.

But I can assure the minister that in three or four months time, despite a possible tax cut in Ottawa, I will have people coming to me in my riding telling me that their rent has gone up by $10 a month and that the landlord told them he did it because of the property tax increase, even when none actually existed.

In my riding, Mr. Speaker, just to let the minister know the way in which these differences take place, in the area where I actually live, 84 per cent of the people are tenants and, therefore, won't benefit from any tax cuts created by the money he is generating from this sales tax increase. Next door, across the road, 97 per cent of the people are tenants. This is the centre of the city and it is essentially a low-income area. In other areas, also low-income, the proportions run 68 per cent and 84 per cent.

When you go to the affluent areas around Island Park Dr. and the Civic Hospital in my riding, you find that almost everybody owns his own home, that 70 per cent of the people own their own homes. When you go to the suburbs of the west end of Ottawa, where people's incomes are in the $10,000 and $15,000 category, you find that 75 and 80 per cent of the people who live there own their own homes.

The money being generated by this sales tax, which is a regressive tax on poor people, when it comes out in the wash will mainly benefit homeowners who will feel the effects directly. Therefore, you have a transfer of tax from poor people to people who are better off. We just can't accept that. We just don't understand that at all.

Mr. Speaker, another point is that this tax is inflationary. I only need to point for the minister's benefit to what happened in Quebec in 1966 to 1967 when the Quebec government raised its sales tax from six to eight per cent. The inflation in Quebec that flowed from that tax increase was one of the direct reasons for the enormous bout of inflation that this country had during the late 1960s.

Is the minister so unaware of economics that he doesn't think that his inflationary tax increase will affect collective bargaining agreements? Does he think the unions will simply stand by and accept that they should be penalized by an added increase in the cost of living, which is already going up by five per cent, without raising any demand to their employers? Does he think that executives, for that matter, won't negotiate also in order to get higher salaries because of the increase in the cost of their inflated standard of living, arising out of the sales tax increase? It's going to happen. One other area, Mr. Speaker, where it's going to happen very specifically and where one can put a very specific cost on the minister's proposals, is in the field of housing that people buy or want to buy. The cost of a new home last year in Toronto was $32,000, according to the National Housing Act statistics. It was a good deal higher than that on an average because many homes were not financed by CMHC. The cost of homes in Ottawa, Hamilton, Windsor and Thunder Bay was also in the range from $29,000 to $31,000. At least $10,000 worth of building materials goes into each of those new homes. It may even be higher. The increase in tax that the minister is imposing amounts to $200 on that $10,000 worth of materials. He is contributing directly to the inflation in housing costs that is such a scandal in this province right today.

Mr. Speaker, people who face that extra cost will have to borrow the money in order to finance it. They will have to borrow that money at current mortgage rates of 9.25 per cent. They will be paying over 20 or 25 years in principal and interest something like an extra $25 a year on their shelter costs in order to accommodate the minister's increase in sales tax. And that, Mr. Speaker, is enough to wipe out any sales tax credit which small families may get from the minister's tax credit.

One wonders if the minister ever talks to his federal leader, whether he even acknowledges that Mr. Stanfield is his federal leader, whether he ever talks to other federal Conservatives. Didn't the minister hear Mr. Stanfield, in ringing tones through the campaign of 1972, promise that a Conservative government would repeal the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials in order to bring down the cost of housing? Didn't he hear the Conservative candidate in his own riding in London promise the same thing? Didn't he see it in the leaflets distributed by his party?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Maybe he didn't allow it.

Mr. Cassidy: How does the minister justify this schizophrenia between the provincial and federal levels of his party? The seven per cent tax that he is imposing on building materials comes on top of an 11 per cent federal tax for a total of 19 per cent of the cost of the materials going into a new home.

Mr. Speaker, that is something like $2,000 to $2,500 going into the cost of a new home, and adding to the housing inflation that we suffer right now. We suggest that it shows absolutely no concern about housing on the minister's part, and that it also reveals that the divisions that are within the Ontario Conservative Party are also matched by the divisions between this Conservative Party and its federal counterparts.

Mr. Martel: Hear, hear. Right on!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the minister might come back and say he agrees, he thinks that there should be an exemption for building materials, or for building materials up to a certain value for moderate-income housing. He might also come back and realize that children's clothing above the certain sizes now specified in the Act should be tax-free if it is designated for kids of under the age of 14 or 16, whatever the cutoff age is.

He might also agree that household necessities, such as soap and cleanser and so on, ought to be exempted. But by that time he will have riddled the tax full of holes if he makes all those exemptions, that's what the minister will say. The exemptions are necessary because it is such a regressive tax and because it is being put to such a high level. That is why we suggest that there are other more equitable means of taxing which the minister should use, rather than homing in on individual consumers, particularly in the lower-income ranges with the kind of taxes he has imposed.

The minister suggested when he had his energy tax that all we needed to do to avoid its incidence was to put on a sweater and turn down the thermostat.

Hon. Mr. White: I didn't say that either.

Mr. Cassidy: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. White: I didn't say that either.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, the minister is rather labelled with it.

Mr. Lewis: It will live with him forever.

Mr. Cassidy: It will, yes. I am just wondering whether he is telling the people of this province that they should put away the soap and wash only once a week, that they should wash their sheets once a month—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: —that they should stop using toilet paper and use green rhubarb leaves.

Mr. Foulds: Or the Reader's Digest.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, that's the kind of attitude the minister has to the necessities that people have.

Hon. Mr. White: There's no tax on hair-cuts.

Mr. Cassidy: Okay, that's not a problem for him because his isn't growing any more.

Hon. Mr. White: What's the member's excuse?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the minister doesn't really know where the people of the province are at. The people I know in my riding may buy the occasional goldfish, and the two-cent saving that the minister gives them by exempting pets, when they go down to Woolworth's to buy a goldfish, may tickle their fancy, but they don't buy dogs for $50, or pedigreed cats for $150. It's the kind of people the minister consorts with who, in fact, will benefit substantially from his repeal of the sales tax on pets.

I, for one, am quite willing to see the sales tax on pets go back, because as far as I am concerned it is a very highly progressive tax; it hits people in upper-income levels and the ones who want to buy jaguars and other things like that, and it doesn't really hit—

Mr. Foulds: Ocelots.

Mr. Cassidy: —the kids and their parents in low-income groups—

Mr. Renwick: They pick them up at the Humane Society.

Mr. Cassidy: —who will get a stray from the Humane Society and are more concerned that an animal be available than to have a pedigree as long as your arm. So we'll support putting that back, if we have to.

But we do suggest that it reveals the minister doesn't really understand where the ordinary people of the province are at. They don't buy these pets, Mr. Speaker. They do buy a number of necessities, they have to buy necessities, and they have to pay this savage tax. It is not fair, and he ought to withdraw it.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I had prepared to speak on this bill in two aspects—the philosophy of those opposing it and the terms themselves. I must say, however, that I was thrown a bit of a curve this morning when I found that one of our bright young Tories apparently has now enunciated for the party two philosophies which may explain in some part why this bill is before us: 1. Women belong in another world; and 2. They are not of the same race as men.

I think we should really have a very full debate on this matter, because I am not sure which of the two was regarded to be of the human race, and I think the minister ought perhaps to explain it.

I am also indebted deeply to my friend from Lakeshore who advised this House as to just what the minister was doing on the weekend; he was, in fact, cutting grass. That explained to me something of the reasoning in this proposed Act, whereby his love of growing things didn't seem to extend to sod, which produced grass and he perhaps has to cut.

If I may, before I get into my opposition in this matter, I do have one element of commendation; it relates, of course, to the amendments with reference to restaurant meals. This is an important factor in a city such as Toronto, and in Metropolitan Toronto, and I commend the government for giving consideration to what has been an inequity for those who must eat all their meals in restaurants because of a lack of adequate housing.

I would like to look at the matter of the way in which the budget itself was produced and this particular aspect of it. It was explained to us by the Treasurer that it is important to keep these matters very confidential until they can get before this House, because one does not want any portion of the public to be able to take unfair advantage of these pronounced policies. Yet it is interesting that in the processing of this particular bill, those who can afford to evade it, at least for a time, have been given ample opportunity to go on their buying sprees. But again those who haven't the funds or the credit to do so are going to be stuck with paying the tax whether they can afford it or not.

I would also like to point out one small factor. It has been my experience in other government areas that the costs of administering such rebates or credits, as has been referred to, can sometimes pretty well erode the whole effect. The Treasurer, in answer to my question in the House, advised me that there would be no costs attached. However, I have taken the opportunity to speak with those in authority in Ottawa, and they advise that this sort of administrative cost is provided for by agreement, and of course there will be charges back for any administrative costs which may flow from it. I point that out because I think it has just a bit of a bearing on whether or not one has adequately considered all of the ramifications of this proposed legislation.

Now we come to general philosophy for a moment, if I may, I think it's almost unanimous in this House, in one form or another, that this type of tax is a regressive tax. What is this government's attitude to financing with relation to this type of legislation.

We see that the Premier (Mr. Davis) of the Province has found it necessary to adequately service his own office, to increase the costs to the taxpayer by close to $1 million in two years. Attendant on that we find it's incumbent upon the Speaker in the budget, to cut the stipends of attendants to try to overcome some of this spending.

We have seen the runaway costs of Medicare. This government's answer is not to try to work out something to give some sort of controls but "Let's cut off stipends to intern-ing students as of last May"—granted, this has been corrected as a result of the opposition—and, of course, to attack the nursing students, although I'm sure none of these can fill the coffers of the party, and to make them pay tuition fees and give them, in some cases, two months to pay $250; and, of course, to pay for part of their residential accommodation.

The Provincial Secretariat for Justice and the whole galaxy of Justice has proliferated and the philosophy of this government is to advise legal aid to cut off services to children in the afternoon because the cost is so high. Why a child in the afternoon should not be as needful of that sort of care as a child in the morning perhaps this government will explain, because it's part of its philosophy.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): It's hard for anyone else to understand.

Mrs. Campbell: I would like not to deal in generalities but to take two specific cases to try to appeal to the Treasurer to understand something of the way in which this tax itself will function.

A young man—a handicapped young man but I trust he does belong to the same race—has an income of $136 per month. Because of his specific disability he has to pay out $200 for shoes in one year. These people are not permitted to work under the system that is operative here—and I'm glad the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko) is here because I wanted to ask a question but my gymnastics are still not catching up with it. These handicapped people are advised that the fire marshal has informed employers that they should not be employed because they are a bad risk. I would love to have that checked. I wanted to ask that question.

These are people who are being asked to pay this tax out of these limited funds. How can the Treasurer say that they will get a credit next year? With this kind of increase I am perfectly certain that they will remain in the house and not get the shoes they need because they won't be able to pay it this year, and it doesn't matter next year.

There is one other point that I would like to make. The Treasurer has stated as his philosophy—and it is one with which I am in entire agreement—that we do not want to pass off to future generations the debts of today.

Hon. Mr. White: I am sorry I didn't say that either.

Mrs. Campbell: All right. He did use another phrase. I just hadn't caught it.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes.

Mrs. Campbell: But it was stated that it was the real objective of this legislation to reduce the debt of this province and, therefore, of course, to have the present generation absorb it. I find the philosophy difficult to understand when one looks at the effect of this tax on future taxpayers who are not provincial taxpayers per se in this equation. Does the Treasurer understand that municipalities have been capitalizing the five per cent for their capital projects and will be of necessity capitalizing the seven per cent for capital projects, and this will be part of their debt financing for many generations to come!

I would note the time, Mr. Speaker, and would feel that it would be incumbent upon me at this point to move the adjournment of this debate.

Mrs. Campbell moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will continue with the debate presently before the House—order 16, Bill 98. We will also start sitting Monday evening.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, just before the adjournment, would the House leader give us assurance that so long as the debate on Bill 98 continues, the estimates committee will not be sitting?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, I will not do that because I am of the opinion, although I am not certain, that the estimates of the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) have been called for Monday.

Mr. Renwick: That is precisely the reason for my question. They have been called for Monday afternoon following the question period. When a bill, such as this bill, is being debated in the assembly, it is not proper that the estimates committee, in my view, should be sitting. That is why I ask for the assurance.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: As I have said on other occasions, Mr. Speaker, I don't intend to interfere with the sitting of committees. I think that this is consistent with the commitment that I gave the House. It is going to be difficult enough to keep them all planned and operating so we don't involve two different groups of people in two different places. I feel satisfied that we are doing the correct thing in accordance with my commitment.

Mr. Renwick: This bill is the core of the budget.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Just a point for the House leader: I understand and accept the relevance of his statement to the fact that estimates in committee will go simultaneously with the House. But on a bill of this kind—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Well, it's up to the committee. The member was complaining earlier—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, no, that isn't really fair.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): The committee never met. So don't give us that nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: That isn't really fair, because the committee will follow what the House leader deems to be appropriate in the order of business and—well, the committee hasn't met yet, that's true; this particular committee hasn't even met. There are obviously people who are going to want to participate on second reading of this bill—since it is the centrepiece of the government's budget—who will also have to be in the committee on the Attorney General's estimates, and that just seems to be an unfair order in the business of the House. Surely the committee can begin to sit on conclusion of second reading.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I am endeavouring to be as co-operative as I possibly can and I know that membership on committees can be substituted. I feel that I have bent over backwards—now far enough in the course of this session—in regard to the committee and the House and so on, in regard to the requests of the opposition. Although I really want to offer every co-operation that I can, I will leave that determination to the committee.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1 o'clock, p.m.
